Shipping Is Paralyzed As 200,000 Maritime Workers Leave Jobs

Last-Minute Parleys Fail to Break Wage Dispute Deadlock With Shipowners

New York (Monday), June 16 (U.P.).—The Nation's 200,000 CIO maritime workers walked off their ships today, paralyzing shipping in all major U. S. ports, after zero-hour negotiations failed to break their deadlock with shipowners.

Accusing the operators of a "lockout" and of failing to bargain in good faith, the seamen and dockworkers left their jobs under a "no contract, no work" policy when the contracts of five CIO unions expired at midnight.

Union leaders estimated the move would tie up 1000 ships in East, Gulf and West Coast ports.

East Coast Ports Hit

First to be hit after the midnight deadline passed were the teeming East Coast ports, headed by New York, where maritime leaders claimed up to 250 ships were affected. The customs house, however, said only 220 American-flag ships were in port, of which 102 were under repair.

A tieup of Gulf and West Coast shipping followed as the deadline moved westward across the Nation. West Coast unions were conducting separate negotiations with Pacific Coast ship owners, but were pledged to walk out if East Coast unions failed to win contracts.

The Pacific American Shipowners Association estimated at San Francisco that 200 of its ships would be tied up in West Coast ports.

The National Maritime Union, 90,000 strong and largest of the five CIO unions involved, spearheaded the East Coast walkout from headquarters in the world's greatest port. Its members threw up picket lines, established five strike headquarters in New York City, and set up soup kitchens and sleeping facilities for 10,000 seamen.

The NMU national council ended a three-hour meeting at 11:15 last night and announced final plans for the walkout.

No Longer Have Contract

A spokesman said NMU members were not ordered to quit their ships, but said all would be notified immediately after the midnight deadline that they no longer had a contract.

"They know what to do then," he added.

Picket patrols were sent out immediately after midnight on the New York waterfront. They carried signs with such inscriptions as "No contract—No work. We are locked out."

Joseph Curran, NMU president, said: "We don't want a strike. We never wanted a strike," but he emphasized that his union would

Fight Brewing Over Expected Tax Bill Veto

Strong Message To House Predicted In Bid for Support

By Felix Cotten
International News Service Staff Writer

Congressional leaders prepared yesterday for a stormy battle over President Truman's veto of the GOP tax reduction bill, scheduled to be submitted to the House this afternoon.

Forecasts are that the President will follow the advice of Democratic leaders and submit a strong veto message in an effort to kill the tax reduction measure in the House without having it go to the Senate to sustain a veto.

Mr. Truman is expected to point to the foreign situation and uncertainties in Congress over total appropriations for the next fiscal year in rejecting tax reduction at this time.

The President meanwhile will delay for a few days his decision on the bipartisan labor control bill, which Congress finally enacted last week. He has until Friday to sign or veto this measure, against which organized labor has directed a Nation-wide attack.

House Action Planned Tuesday

GOP leaders plan to call up the President's anticipated veto of the four-billion-dollar tax reduction bill in the House tomorrow.

Speaker Martin and Chairman Knutson (R., Minn.) of the House Ways and Means Committee predicted that the House would override the veto.

They based this forecast on the 220 to 99 vote by which the House passed the final version of the bill, which would cut personal income taxes 10.5 to 30 per cent, with half of the reduction applicable to 1947 incomes. This vote is more than the two thirds majority necessary to override.

The CIO and allied organizations meanwhile leveled sharp blasts at the labor regulation bill and urged a veto of the measure.

Crew Killed As B-29 Rams Into Mountain

12 Bodies Are Found; Plane Circled Vermont Village Before Crash

Springfield, Vt., June 15 (A.P.).—A lost, storm-beset Army plane—desperately blinking its lights in a last signal for aid—crashed into the side of lonely Hawks Mountain early today and an Army spokesman said "it now looks as though 12 were killed."

Col. E. L. Tucker, commandant at Grenier Field, N. H., said the B-29 Superfortress had 15 aboard when it left Tucson, Ariz., yesterday, but the passenger list was changed when it refueled at the Greater Pittsburgh Airport.

The number of persons aboard when the plane crashed and exploded a few hundred feet from the top of the 2300-foot mountain was not yet known.

Tonight, a little more than 20 hours after the crash, the Army spokesman said a twelfth body had been found by the weary searchers beating their way through up-

Army Plane in Crash Landing at Fort Knox, Ky.

Fort Knox, Ky., June 15 (U.P.).—An Army C-47 transport plane faltered shortly after the take-off from Godman Field here today, then returned to make a crash landing, slightly injuring most of the 20 persons aboard.

The plane, carrying 19 Army men and one civilian from Washington's Bolling Field, burst into flames only seconds after its crash landing. But all the passengers escaped, largely through the heroic efforts of an unnamed Army sergeant who opened the front escape hatch.

(At Bolling Field, a base officer who had contacted the Fort Knox airfield identified the hero as Staff Sergt. C. M. Green, radio operator, of Bolling Field.

(The other crew members were listed as Lieut. Frank E. Deloach, 28, Jacksonville, Fla., pilot; Capt.

Fragile Antique Deprives Burglar Of Rare Art Loot

Tampa, Fla., June 15 (U.P.).—The antique chair that always collapses at the wrong time apparently foiled a burglar in his attempt to steal a $100,000 art collection.

Welburn Guernsey, Tampa radio dealer, today looked at the paintings he keeps for the Widener Estate of Philadelphia. He found the room littered with pieces of a broken teakwood chair, a broken lamp and the painting of "The Money Lender," valued at $7500, on the floor with a hole poked through the canvas by the chair.

Guernsey believed that a burglar, familiar with the storeroom, had entered during the night, avoided the burglar alarm system and started to remove the paintings from the wall.

But when the thief stood on the antique chair to take down "The Money Lender," the chair collapsed, frightening him away.

32 Identified

Hearses Carry Plane Crash Dead to Chapel at Leesburg

It was a black Sunday for Leesburg, Va. Throughout the morning and most of the afternoon a parade of black hearses rolled silently down from the mountains with a cargo of dead.

They brought to Leesburg Cemetery Chapel the bodies of 48 persons who perished Friday night when a DC-4 Capital-Pennsylvania Central Airliner exploded against a rain-shrouded Blue Ridge mountainside 14 miles to the northwest of Leesburg.

Although 50 are known to have died in the crash, two bodies remained undiscovered. Searchers believe these bodies were totally consumed in the inferno which swept the wreckage after the impact.

Identification of the charred and mutilated bodies was not easy. Of the 48 bodies brought down wild, tangled trails from the crash scene, only 32 had been positively identified late last night. Another had been tentatively identified.

The bodies of eight Washington area victims—three of them members of the crew—were among those identified.

These were the bodies of Dr. Courtney M. Smith, Red Cross medical director, 9901 Edgehill lane, Silver Spring, Md.; Allen C. Coe, employe of the Public Hous-

Plane With Two Aboard Overdue at Washington

Norfolk, Va., June 15 (U.P.).—The Civil Aeronautics Administration communication station reported here today that a Globe Swift airplane bound for Washington with two persons aboard is more than 24 hours overdue.

Occupants of the small plane, which took off between 6 and 7 a. m. (EDT) yesterday, were identified as a Navy chief signalman named Landry, pilot, and Walter Dews, passenger.

Board Named To Probe Air Safety

President Appoints Landis, 4 Others for Exhaustive Inquiry Following Crashes

By Charles E. Davis, jr.
Post Reporter

Alarmed by recent airline disasters, President Truman yesterday appointed a special five-man board to make an exhaustive investigation of air safety.

Mr. Truman's move came within 48 hours of the Nation's third shocking air tragedy in less than a month—the crash of a Pennsylvania-Central Capital Air Liner against a mountainside near Leesburg, Va., Friday night.

This latest crash cost the lives of 50 persons, bringing to 146 the number of lives lost in three recent DC-4 accidents. On May 29 a DC-4 crashed and burned during a take-off at LaGuardia Field, New York, with a death toll of 43. One day later a DC-4 plummeted into swampland near Port Deposit, Md., carrying 53 persons to their deaths.

An open hearing into the Maryland crash will get under way today at Bainbridge, Md.

President Truman named Chairman James M. Landis of the Civil Aeronautics Board to head his special board of inquiry on air safety.

Others Named to Board

Brig. Gen. Milton W. Arnold, vice president of the Air Transport Association.

Dr. Jerome C. Hunsaker, chairman of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, a Government research agency.

T. P. Wright, Civil Aeronautics administrator.

H. B. Cox, a civil engineer, American Airlines pilot and a member of the Airlines Pilots Association (AFL).

Following Mr. Truman's announcement, Landis said the new board will meet at 2:30 p. m. tomorrow in his office.

End of Tragedies Demanded

The President's action came while demands were brewing in Congress and across the Nation that steps be taken to put an end to the series of air tragedies.

Chairman Wallace H. White (R., Me.) of the Senate Commerce Committee said he "heartily approved" Mr. Truman's action.

White, who is also Senate Majority Leader, described the move as "altogether in order" and said he hoped the presidential group would "work harmoniously with our subcommittee on aviation," a group headed by Senator Owen Brewster (R., Me.).

In appointing the board the President cited "the recent accidents" and said he had decided the safety problem should be "carefully examined" by a group representing all interests in civil air transport.

Studies Possibilities

The White House made public a letter sent to the members appointed to the new air safety board. In his letter, Mr. Truman did not specify "the recent accidents" which gave rise to his concern.

But the President began studying possible steps in connection with the airline tragedies after the DC-4 crash near Leesburg, Va., Friday night.

He conferred by telephone with CAB Chairman Landis who was then in New York in connection with the hearing into the cause of the crash last month at LaGuardia Field.

The possibility of congressional demands for a new safety inquiry, such as those carried on early this year by the House and Sen-

Europe Aid Hurts U. S., Hoover Says

Inflationary Danger Seen in Becoming 'Debtor Rather Than Creditor' Nation

New York, June 15 (A.P.).—Herbert Hoover declared tonight the United States is "over-exporting" its resources and cannot continue its present rate of foreign gifts and loans "without further evil consequences to our stability."

The former Republican President said in a letter to Chairman Bridges (R., N. H.) of the Senate Finance Committee that "the greatest danger to all civilization" lies in the possibility that the United States will impair its economy "by drains which cripple our productivity."

"Unless this one remaining Gibraltar of economic strength is maintained," he said, "chaos will be inevitable over the whole world."

Sees Inflationary Effect

Pointing to an excess of $7,800,000,000 of American exports over imports and saying it had contributed to an inflationary spiral at home, Hoover declared:

"The conclusion seems to me irrefutable that as the result of our rate of giving and lending we are over-exporting goods and cannot continue at such a rate with our present production and consumption without further evil consequences to our stability."

Hoover's cautionary note follows a go-slow statement by Senator Vandenberg (R., Mich.) last week urging that any foreign aid program be based on a "total balance sheet" of American ability to provide goods and services for world rehabilitation.

Together, the statements apparently represented a Republican demand for a thorough assessment of this country's economy before foreign aid decisions are made.

Hoover told Bridges that the United States probably has become a debtor, rather than a creditor, nation. He noted that the American taxpayer must bear the burden of gifts and loans abroad.

Repayment Deferred

"These gifts are an immediate burden on the taxpayer," he wrote. "The goods furnished under loans also must be paid for immediately while the repayment is deferred for years.

"This has a bearing upon our tax burdens, including local government expenditures, they now amount to about 35 per cent of our national income. No free nation can continue at that rate for long without impairing its productivity."

The one-time Chief Executive's letter was written to Bridges in response to a request for his views on the limits of foreign relief and loans.

Bridges also asked Hoover's ideas on whether there were methods by which United States loans and gifts could be increased and on policies needed "to make our resources more effective in world rehabilitation."

Hoover again placed blame for delays in world reconstruction on Soviet Russia as he did in a letter to Chairman John Taber (R., N. Y.) of the House Appropriations Committee last month.

Accuses Soviet Union

"The obstruction of the Soviet government to peace has, during the past two years, imposed billions in expenditures upon us through support of occupation armies and relief to starvation which could not otherwise have been required," he said. "However, we can apparently expect little cooperation from that quarter."

Hoover gave implied indorse-

The Post Poll

54% Favor Free Hot Lunches For District School Children

Fifty-four per cent of District residents think District schools should provide free hot lunches for all school children, according to a survey by The Post Poll.

An additional 31 per cent say the schools should provide free hot lunches only for those children whose parents cannot give them adequate meals.

Twelve per cent oppose the idea altogether. The remaining 3 per cent are undecided.

A total of 28 per cent believe that many Washington children are undernourished; 41 per cent believe few are undernourished; 31 per cent don't know.

At the present time only 12 public schools in the District operate lunch programs with Federal aid. In these schools, free hot lunches are provided for 15,549 children regardless of ability to pay. Part of the cost of providing the lunches is paid by the Federal Government, most by the District. There are 90,000 children in D. C. public schools.

These Post Poll findings on views of Washingtonians are based on personal interviews with a cross-section of District residents.

District residents were asked: "Do you think that District schools should provide a free hot lunch for all school children?"

Replies were divided as follows:

	All Groups	Annual Family Income: Under $3000	$3000-$4999	$5000 & over
YES, schools should provide free lunches	54%	61%	55%	41%
NO, provide lunches only for needy children	31	23	35	39
NO, schools should not provide free lunches	12	12	8	13
UNDECIDED	3	4	2	2

Post Pollers also asked: "In your opinion, are many Washington school children undernourished, or are only a few?"

Here are the answers:

	All Groups	White	Negro
Many are undernourished	28%	23%	46%
Few are undernourished	41	39	46
Don't know	31	38	14

Russia Deliberately Blocks International Accord, Acheson Says

Soviets Accused Of Halting Whole Recovery Course Since End of War

Post Reporter

Undersecretary of State Dean Acheson yesterday accused Russia of having blocked "the whole course of recovery and the international pursuit of happiness" since the end of war.

Two weeks before his retirement from public office, the Undersecretary threw aside diplomatic restraint, and blamed Russia directly for many of the frustrations of the last two years.

He charged the Soviet government with having pursued "policies diametrically opposed to the very premises of international accord and recovery."

In addition, he said, postwar exhaustion and natural disasters have left Europe financially "bleeding to death," with the result that the United States will have to redouble its efforts to help before next spring.

His speech was made at the Wesleyan University commencement at Middletown, Conn., where he received the honorary degree of doctor of laws.

It was the most thoroughgoing indictment of Soviet policies made by any high American official for a long time. It was approved in advance by Secretary Marshall.

Cites United States Moves

Ending seven years of Government service at the end of this month, the Undersecretary who only three months ago provoked an official Soviet protest because he told a congressional committee Soviet policy was "aggressive and expanding," said the United States had proved its good will toward the Soviet Union during the war by:

1. Lend-lease and UNRRA aid totaling 12 billion dollars;

2. Following "purely military objectives" in its military operations in Europe;

3. Recognizing Soviet "fears and interests" in the postwar settlements in eastern Europe, Germany and the Far East; and

4. Supporting every kind of international organization that would make relations between nations "more safe, simple and beneficial."

Obstructions Detailed

On the other hand, he said the Soviet government had taken an obstructive and noncooperative course in many areas.

In eastern Europe it had carried out a single-handed policy, contrary to the Yalta agreements, of denying free political choice to the peoples there and of fastening minority Communist regimes upon them.

In the Far East, it had dismantled the industries of Manchuria, obstructed the unification of Korea and failed to return Dairen to China as promised.

In Iran it had kept the country "in turmoil," first through occupa-

U. S. 'Would/Should' Fight

Wallace Wants to Halt Soviet Expansion at Central Turkey

By Walter Pulliam
Post Reporter

Henry Wallace said here yesterday that a line should be drawn on Russian expansion.

He set that boundary as central Turkey which he described as the queen in an international chess game.

He said further, at a news conference, that he felt the United States "would" fight if Russia overstepped that line and that he felt it important for Russia to know this. At first he used the word, "should," but later, after some consideration, changed it to "would."

He attributed Turkey's importance to Saudi Arabian oil which, he said, the United States should make available to other nations, including Russia, under Article 4 of the Atlantic Charter. He described present European maneuvering as "preliminaries" in the game aimed at Turkey.

Meanwhile, Leon Henderson, executive committee chairman of Americans for Democratic Action, sent a strongly worded telegram to the American Anti-Communist Association, protesting the latter organization's efforts to block Wallace's talk at 8 o'clock tonight at the Watergate.

The telegram, addressed to Representative Alvin E. O'Konski (R., Wis.), the Anti-Communist Association president, pointed out that, while the ADA does not agree with Wallace, it believes him entitled to freedom of speech under the Constitution.

It stressed ADA opposition to Wallace's stand on foreign policy, pointed out its dissent from his view that liberals can cooperate with Communists and described Wallace as one "dangerously confused" who has "misrepresented important international issues." Still, the telegram concluded, "freedom of speech and freedom of assembly are first among the glories of our democracy."

The Anti-Communist Association has announced plans to seek an injunction in United States District Court here today to keep Wallace from using the Waterwate, a Capital Parks amphitheater.

Latest blast at Wallace came from Republican National Chair-

Advice Asked By Economic Report Group

Agriculture, Business And Labor Chiefs Sent Questionnaire Forms

By the United Press

The Congressional Joint Committee on the Economic Report announced yesterday that it has asked key men in industry, trade, finance, agriculture and labor to contribute their "sound thinking" to the battle for economic stability and progress.

In a third survey embracing prices, profits, purchases and income, the committee seeks to establish the "character of governmental policies which can contribute to the continued maintenance of prosperity and the prevention of depressions."

"The primary purpose of the questionnaire," Chairman Robert A. Taft (R., Ohio) said in a letter accompanying the questions, "is to elicit answers that will contribute to the development of sound thinking, rather than to obtain a statistical picture of 'yes-or-no' views of the persons responding."

The committee was set up by statute to advise and consult with the President on the Nation's economic welfare. The President, in turn, must make periodical economic-outlook reports to the committee.

The group thus far has kept silent on Mr. Truman's repeated appeals for voluntary Nation-wide price cuts to end the inflationary threat.

The survey is of two parts. First are questions directed to all respondents dealing with the maintenance of favorable economic questions generally. The second part is directed to specific groups concerning their own particular problems.

For example, all are asked whether they believe that prices are at a level which endangers the market. And whether they regard the present level of wages and salaries in general as too high, too low, or in proportion to other economic factors.

Soviet Rebuffs U. S., Britain On Hungary

Protests Termed Attempt to Interfere In Internal Affairs

Soviet officials in Moscow and Budapest have rejected the latest United States and British representations over Hungary, press dispatches said last night.

Gen. V. P. Sviridov, Russian member of the Allied Control Council in Budapest, curtly turned down a U. S. request for a three-power investigation as "rude intervention into Hungarian internal political affairs."

Russian Foreign Minister Viacheslav M. Molotov dismissed the British protest on Hungary, telling British Ambassador Sir Maurice Peterson it was "a new attempt at interference" in Hungarian affairs by the British.

Sviridov's reply to a U. S. note presented last Wednesday was printed without editorial comment in Sunday morning editions of the Budapest Communist newspaper Szabad Nep along with the text of the U. S. note.

Brig. Gen. George Weems, American member of the Allied Control Council for Hungary, received the reply at 1 a. m. Sunday, the United Press said.

The Soviet answer said that statements in the United States note were fundamentally false. Cause of the Hungarian crisis, it said, was Premier Nagy's refusal to return to Budapest. (Nagy is now in Washington.)

The Soviet reply said the crisis had been cleared up in accordance with the Hungarian constitution and the will of the overwhelming majority of the Hungarian people.

Molotov, in dismissing the British protest, also turned down a British request for information on conspiracy charges against Bela Kovacs, former secretary of the Smallholders Party, arrested by the Communist-dominated government of Hungary.

The Soviet action on the British representations was announced in Moscow last night by the informa-

Ousted Premier Of Hungary Now In Washington

Ferenc Nagy, who recently resigned as Prime Minister of Hungary because of Communist pressure, arrived in Washington at 3:30 a. m. yesterday with his family.

Nagy was too exhausted by his air trip from Geneva, Switzerland, via New York, to be interviewed, according to a spokesman for Aladar Szegedy-Maszak, former Hungarian minister to the United States. Szegedy-Maszak and other former officials met Nagy in New York and returned here with him.

In New York, the ousted Prime Minister said the purpose of his trip was to "convince the democratic big powers that the people of Hungary and other southeastern European countries need their assistance now to show that freedom and liberty are more than words."

Nagy is at the Burlington Hotel here with his wife, his daughter, Juliet, 21, and a son, Lazlo, 4. His other son, Ferenc, jr., 22, resigned as attache in the Hungarian Legation here when his father was ousted.

Senate GOP Leaders Reported Ready to Sidetrack Mundt Bill

By Jack Bell
Associated Press Staff Writer

Senate Republican leaders were reported agreed yesterday on a plan to pigeonhole the Mundt bill, authorizing a full-scale foreign information program, if the House passes it.

Instead, they would give Assistant Secretary of State William Benton just six million dollars to carry on limited "Voice of America" overseas broadcasts, requiring him to procure most of the programs from commercial broadcasting companies and cut his own staff to skeleton size. Benton seeks 34 million dollars for the year starting July 1.

The decision to sidetrack the Administration-backed bill by Representative Mundt (R., S. Dak.) for fullfledged authorization of a foreign information and educational exchange program was said to have been reached in conferences of Senators Vandenberg (R., Mich.), Taft (R., Ohio), Ball (R., Minn.) and others.

As now contemplated, the Republican plan calls for attaching the six million dollars to the pending State Department appropriation bill. If this decision were challenged on the floor, it would require two-thirds approval of those voting to suspend the Senate's rules to place the appropriation in the bill, inasmuch as it was stricken out of the measure by the House on the ground that Congress never had authorized the program.

Senate Republican leaders feel that the Administration will agree to this procedure because the alternative might be sudden death for the project.

Even if the six-million-dollar item were attached in the Senate, it still might face a fight in the House.

The House has been haggling several days over the Mundt bill. On Friday it adopted an amend-

Labor Bill Effects Debated Further

Pro and Con Arguments Are Presented On Union Elections, Political Activity

(This Is the Second of Two Articles)

What effects will the necessarily technical provisions of the Taft-Hartley labor bill have on collective bargaining and on labor-management relations.

Will they, as proponents of the legislation contend, simply implement and effectuate the avowed aims of the bill—aims which for the most part are beyond challenge? Or, as critics of the bill insist, are the provisions so drafted as to make admilnistration of the proposed law unworkable and to deny unions aid and protection?

The pros and cons of this argument, as they apply to 14 major provisions of the bill, were presented in Section II of yesterday's Post. Below are similar discussions of four more sections.

The arguments against the provisions, as expressed by the bill's opponents, are presented in the left-hand column. The replies to these objections, as stated by the congressional supporters of the bill, appear in the right-hand column.

NLRB PROCEDURE

15. Pre-Elections. The NLRB is no longer authorized to hold elections prior to a formal hearing on the representative case.

* * * *

Where no substantial issue was involved, NLRB practice was to hold an election, certify a union if it won the election, and let it proceed with collective bargaining. Later, if any minor issues on representation still remained in dispute, it would hold a hearing. Usually the issues did not remain in dispute; in only about 15 per cent of these cases was it necessary to hold a later hearing.

The procedure contributed significantly to facilitating an early beginning of collective bargaining. It would be forbidden by the new bill, at exactly the time when the bill adds several-fold to other NLRB burdens.

The NLRB is still permitted to hold elections without hearings if both sides agree. But where the employer has insisted on hearings and the NLRB denied them until after the elections, experience has revealed that the whole proceedings were tainted with unnecessary controversy.

In practice the preelection plan did not expedite matters, because postelection hearings frequently revealed that substantial issues had been overlooked.

16. Employment of Economists and Arbitrators. The NLRB is forbidden to employ economic analysts, or to turn over to arbitrators decisions on jurisdictional disputes.

* * * *

The bill requires the NLRB to determine what are "excessive" union initiation fees, and to decide all jurisdictional disputes. Both of these issues usually involve difficult economic questions, yet the NLRB is denied the technical help to be had from its own economists.

Further, in jurisdictional disputes, a decision means that one union must lose in an issue usually very vital to its existence. From the point of view of satisfactory future working relationships on other matters between that union and the NLRB, it would be much better if an arbitrator, and not the NLRB, did the deciding.

Finally, and most important, an arbitrator's decision has a degree of legal finality which no NLRB decision enjoys, particularly as the new bill amends NLRB authority. An arbitrator's award would be likely to put an end there and then, to a jurisdictional dispute. An NLRB award means only that the case will be fought out up through the courts, with the NLRB's findings and procedure subject to challenge. In effect, the case will be tried all over again.

The general purpose of the bill is to make the NLRB behave like a court. There is nothing in the bill to prevent either side from putting on economists as expert witnesses, but the board, like a court, should act on the record, not on the secret advice of its staff members.

In deciding appropriate bargaining unit cases, the NLRB has already had ample experience in what amount to jurisdictional disputes. The new provision merely makes these decisions binding on unions as well as on employers.

Finally, there is a very serious question of delegating NLRB authority to a private individual employed as an arbitrator.

17. Abolition of Review Division. No NRLB trial examiner's report may be reviewed, or an opinion drafted on the case, by anyone except board members or their personal legal assistants.

* * * *

This provision abolishes the NLRB review division, which went over the trial examiners' cases and submitted reports to the board. The provision may mean, therefore, that each of the five board members must review all of the cases, or set up his own legal staff. Each staff must be large enough to study, separately, all of the cases.

The board is already a year behind on its docket, and now will be deprived of one of its agencies to facilitate and speed up its work. Instead it will be forced to adopt an even more time-consuming procedure.

The purpose is to place greater responsibility on board members for the performance of their judicial duties. Since they would be relieved, under the bill, from all responsibility for the supervision of field activities and investigation of complaints, the members, with the aid of their law clerks, should be able to give greater individual analysis to controversial cases.

Hitherto, instead of the divergent views of different members being reflected in each decision, the NLRB determinations have been a product of the corporate personality of the review division. To that extent, the congressional purpose of having the law administered by several members, rather than by one administrator, has been frustrated.

MISCELLANEOUS

18. Political Activity. Both unions and corporations are forbidden to make contributions or expenditures in national election campaigns, including primaries, caucuses and conventions.

* * * *

Although purporting to be even-handed in its effect on both employers and workers, the prohibition is likely to weigh more heavily on unions, since corporation officers and owner groups are usually able to finance personal contributions out of their own incomes much more easily than union officers and members.

Further, there is a serious question affecting freedom of the press. Some 95 per cent of union papers are paid for out of union funds, rather than from subscriptions paid directly and specifically for the paper by the member. Under the provision, these union papers could not make any political expression during an election campaign.

But the union officer has more opportunity to pass the hat among members than a corporation officer has among stockholders.

The real purpose of the provision is to prevent corporate and union trust funds, obtained for other purposes, from being diverted.

The breadth of the provision's application is limited, like that of the Hatch and Corrupt Practices Acts, by constitutional guarantees of free speech, press and assembly.

Christian Century Editor Retires After 40 Years

Under his guidance the weekly grew from less than 1000 circulation as the denominational journal of the Disciples of Christ, to a publication of nearly 40,000 circulation.

Paul Hutchinson, managing editor since 1924, will become editor and Harold E. Fey, former associate editor, will become managing editor.

"mobilize fully" to "beat the ship owners' lockout."

The NMU walked out after ship operators rejected its demands for a 20 per cent wage increase, 40-hour week, six-week paid vacations and other benefits.

The operators offered a one-year extension of the present contract, with provision for a wage review next December 15.

Two other CIO unions directly involved in the East and Gulf Coast negotiations walked out with the NMU. They were the American Communications Association, which asked a 25 per cent wage increase, and other benefits similar to NMU demands, and the Marine Cooks and Stewards, whose 12,000 members had asked for a one-year extension of their existing contract.

Ship owners rejected the cooks and stewards' request and notified them that their contract should be canceled as of midnight Sunday. Refusal of the operators to withdraw the cancellation notice precipitated much of the bitterness in subsequent negotiations.

Federal conciliators made last-minute efforts to get seamen and shipowners together yesterday, working up to the deadline without success.

Also involved in the walkout were the powerful International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union and the Marine Engineers Beneficial Association.

The longshoremen were the only ones who had obtained a signed completed contract, but it was conditional upon contracts being reached between shipowners and the other unions.

The engineers had obtained a contract on the West Coast and their president, S. F. Hogan, ordered East Coast negotiating committees to refrain from strike action until further notice. Other union leaders pointed out, however, that it was unlikely members of one union would cross the picket lines of a sister group.

On the West Coast, only the Marine Cooks and Stewards and the American Communications Association had been negotiating with shipowners before the deadline passed. They charged that cancellation of the cooks and stewards contract constituted a lockout.

Not All Shipping Affected

Not all American shipping was tied up, since vessels manned by AFL unions were not affected. AFL maritime unions announced they would continue at work. No foreign-flag vessels are affected.

They announced, however, they would not operate ships owned by struck shipping firms, and at least two AFL unions announced they would not cross CIO picket lines around individual ships.

At Philadelphia an NMU spokesman estimated 40 ships were tied up by the walkout of 1500 NMU members there. Union members at Boston said 12 ships were affected there and at Jacksonville, Fla., 9 vessels were tied up in port.

At New Orleans Harry Alexander, NMU contract enforcer, estimated 10,000 to 15,000 seamen were involved in that area.

[At Baltimore up to 15,000 maritime workers and 80 ocean transports were involved. Chairman Irv Dvorin of the Baltimore section of the East Coast subcommittee of the CIO Maritime Committee had previously announced picket lines would be placed around the port at 8 a. m. (EDT) today.

[Council Chairman William Rentz said AFL Maritime unions would respect picket lines of CIO locals. Thus, about 10,000 AFL longshoremen would be affected, in addition to the CIO workers at Baltimore.]

Parley Set Today

St. Louis, June 15 (AP).—Representatives of the Public Service Co. and officials of the union met separately today to discuss two proposals for settlement of the streetcar and bus operators strike, now in its third day. The representatives were scheduled to meet tomorrow morning.

tion bureau of the Soviet Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Molotov, the Soviet communique reported, said the British believed that Russia had decided to nullify Hungarian parliamentary elections and eliminate the Smallholders to place a minority group (the Communists) in power.

British Protest Brushed Aside

According to the communique, "Molotov pointed out that the hidden methods ascribed to Soviet organs in Hungary by the (British) Ambassador perhaps are peculiar to British organs but are entirely alien to Soviet organs."

Molotov said Nagy had resigned his office of his own volition and had been replaced by a member of the same party according to constitutional procedure.

"All these circumstances point out that accusations brought by the British government against Soviet organs in Hungary have no grounds and the proposal which has been made in the name of the British government cannot signify anything other than a new attempt at interference into the internal affairs of Hungary and must be looked upon as the desire to force upon Hungary the will of some foreign governments," the Soviet announcement said.

"Owing to this, the Soviet government looks in a negative manner upon the present statement of the British government made by Mr. Peterson and at the same time does not consider that the events which have taken place in Hungary are interfering with the development of normal relations between Hungary and Great Britain."

General Sviridov felt that the American note was designed to help "certain persons who escaped," his reply indicated.

Investigation Seen Unnecessary

There was no need for a quadripartite investigation, his reply added, because the case of Bela Kovacs, former Smallholder Party secretary who was jailed by the government for "conspiracy," has "nothing to do with the duties of the Allied Control Council."

"I have to refuse your note as being a mere invention and must state that the Yalta agreement was not violated in any respect," Sviridov's reply said. "Your statement about Soviet intervention is nothing but a poor invention."

According to the Associated Press Budapest newspapers said yesterday that both Nagy and former speaker of the house Bela Varga would be tried in absentia on charges of attempting to overthrow the republic.

The newspapers quoted Minister of Justice Istvan Ries as saying he had ordered the people's prosecutor to start "criminal proceedings."

Varga was last reported outside the Soviet sphere of influence.

The papers said the government planned to issue a white paper soon detailing the actions of Nagy and Varga and showing that "Nagy was the man who actually led the whole conspiracy from behind the scenes."

man Carroll Reece only a few minutes before Wallace started his press conference. Reece released a letter addressed to GOP leaders, calling Wallace "the leading American exponent of the Moscow party line" and charging the Democratic Party must take the sole blame for his "sabotage" of American foreign policy.

Reece said the Republicans are hoping Wallace supports President Truman for reelection, asserting Wallace's support would "make the issue between the major parties unmistakably clear."

In the meantime, some 300 youths and girls of the "National Youth Lobby," which is sponsored by the Young Progressive Citizens of America, affiliate of Henry A. Wallace's PCA, gathered here to "present to our Representatives in Congress a minimum legislative program which will meet the needs of young America."

Dr. Clark Foreman, president of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare, told the delegates at Turner's Arena:

"Senator (Clayton D.) Buck (R., Del.) is mayor of Washington "and the duPonts tell him where the money should go. It seems to me we should at least practice democracy in the Nation's Capital."

Other speakers included James Moss, chairman of the New York Youth Council; Rev. William B. Spofford, jr., a New York Episcopal minister; Don Rothenberg, chairman of the George Washington University chapter, American Veterans Committee; Eugene Cotton of the CIO Legal Department, and Leslie Perry, legislative director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Wallace told reporters he had gone over the Un-American Activities Committee report of Saturday condemning the Southern Conference as a "Communist front" organization "only superficially" and had found it "without substance."

As to his 1948 political activities, he said he was still hopeful of making the Democratic Party "liberal," although he admitted he had "not got very far" to date. He said definitely he would not consider running again for the vice presidency.

Commenting on the recent Communist coup in Hungary, the former Commerce Secretary scoffed at suggestions Russia is seeking to "take over" that country. He charged Anglo-Saxons had done the same sort of thing in Greece. He said he felt Russia would be "foolish" to expand beyond her western boundaries.

Europe Aid Policy Threatens U. S. Economy, Hoover Says

ment to the Truman doctrine by stating "we should concentrate our limited resources in the areas in which western civilization can be preserved."

Discussing reports, he asserted, "it must be recognized that we cannot safely, through gifts and loans export more goods than our surplus." He added:

"The immediate result of exporting more than a surplus in our free economy is to raise prices. From that we get a dangerous spiral of increased costs of living and wages."

"I would not contend that the whole rise in living costs, with its inflation spiral, has been due to our large exports. But it cannot be denied that with fewer exports that increase would not have been so great.

Exports Estimated

"The conclusion seems to me irrefutable that as a result of our rate of giving and lending we are over-exporting and cannot continue at such a rate with our present production and consumption without further evil consequences to our stability."

The letter estimated U. S. exports at $13,500,000,000 for the 1945-46 fiscal year and $15,500,000,000 for 1946-47. Imports were placed at $7,200,000,000 and $7,700,000,000, respectively, for the two periods. Thus, Hoover said, there was an excess of almost $14,000,000,000 in exports for the two years, which was met through gifts and loans.

He analyzed American commitments for the next 12 months and concluded the U. S. would have to export in that period at about the same rate as in the last two years, or between $14,000,000,000 and $16,000,000,000 annually, to pay for probable imports and meet promises for gifts and loans.

"Any study of our international balance sheet," he remarked, "taking into account, on one hand, our commitments in loans, foreign deposits, and investments in the United States, etc., and on the other hand probable returns from previous loans and lend-lease, including our citizens' greatly impaired foreign investments, will likely discover that the United States is today a debtor rather than a creditor nation."

Discussing the effect of exports on living costs, Hoover said "We have exported gigantic amounts of agricultural products" and added that increases in agricultural prices have accounted for about 70 per cent of the 20 per cent rise in the cost-of-living index in the last 12 months.

Taken From Construction

He said some exports "have been taken away from our own possible railway, factory and housing construction."

He wrote that "while the world situation requires that we do our best, my own view is that, unless we can undertake to increase our productivity or decrease our consumption of goods, we must seriously reduce the volume of exports below the rate of the last two years with a corresponding reduction in the gifts and loans for which we supply goods.

"Various proposals have been made for expansion of loans by fifty of more billion dollars. The impracticability of these ideas with our present rate of production must be obvious."

Hoover said the suggested importation of more goods to diminish the amount of loans and gifts the United States must furnish would be "of very minor help," but he said this country profitably could import and stockpile for national defense some commodities such as tin, manganese, iron ore, mercury, copper, lead, zinc, tungsten, nickel and rubber.

The former President declared consideration must be given to depletion of America's natural resources in the foreign-aid program.

Would Avoid Controls

He noted that proposals have been made for reestablishment of wartime controls to "increase our ability to export more goods," but remarked:

"That is a form of totalitarian economy which the American people are not likely to accept in peace for it would do violence to our whole concept of freedom."

The letter concluded with recommendation of several general policies, including:

Single, coordinated action on the part of all Government agencies dealing with foreign relief; prevention of excessive exports; increase in available export surplus volume by voluntary reduction of consumption "if necessary to prevent starvation;" limits on gifts and loans through periodic estimates of goods and services that can be safely exported; insistence that recipient nations should cooperate "in measures to reduce the burdens upon us, to promote productivity and bring peace for the world at large;" inspection of use to which our relief supplies are put.

Fight Brewing On Tax Veto

Haywood denounced as a "lie" statements that the Taft-Hartley labor measure was "moderate" and said it "contains at least 21 restrictions not contained in the original Senate version." He added:

"Truly, the Taft-Hartley bill is loaded with more jokers than the cardpack of a Mississippi River-boat gambler. . . .

Illegal Discharges Alleged

"We call upon President Truman to veto it. We call upon the Congress to sustain such a veto, in the interests of all the people."

Haywood said that passage by Congress of the bill had caused many employers to repeal the Wagner Labor Relations Act "in their own minds at least." He added:

"A dangerous wave of illegal discharges, refusal to settle grievances, interference with union activities and unwillingness to bargain in good faith are resulting from this selfish attitude."

Donald Henderson, president of the food, Tobacco, Agricultural and Allied Workers Union, CIO, sent to the President a plea to veto the labor bill.

The Progressive Citizens of America announced that it "assumed" that the President would veto the bill and appealed to him to summon a caucus of all Democratic members of Congress to insure that the veto would be sustained.

The Cabinet is reported to be divided on the question of a veto. As a result, Mr. Truman is not expected to act on the legislation until near the deadline.

If the House overrides a tax bill veto, the Senate will call up the veto message Wednesday. GOP leaders concede that the upper chamber will undoubtedly sustain a veto, since the Senate vote of 48 to 28 on final passage of the legislation was less than the two-thirds majority necessary to override.

SPECIAL NOTICES

A SPECIAL MEETING of the stockholders of the Potomac Insurance Company of the District of Columbia is called and will be held in the Board Room of the National Metropolitan Bank of Washington, 613 15th Street, N.W., Washington, D. Passage of Refugee Bill Now Unlikely

Program at Stake

Creedon Sees Housing Hurt By Rent Bill

By The Associated Press

Housing Expediter Frank R. Creedon said yesterday the new rent control bill which Congress expects to pass this week may wreck the housing program.

Creedon reported that "a huge volume of nonresidential construction is expected to start" if his controls over commercial building are removed, and that is what the rent bill would do. He added in his monthly report on the housing program that:

"It is apparent that in a good many areas throughout the country, materials supply is still too critical to permit complete freedom of nonresidential construction without disastrous consequences to homebuilding."

At the same time, Representative Javits (R., N. Y.) announced he will introduce a resolution today calling for a special House committee to investigate the national housing shortage.

"Case of the Missing House"

"I feel confident that the vast majority of the American people are tired of labor, industry and Government bickering about who is guilty in the 'case of the missing home,'" Javits declared in a statement.

A nine-member investigating committee would be required to file interim reports, to be followed by a final report by January 3, so the new Congress would be able to act immediately on the housing problem.

The compromise bill continuing rent control is set for House ratification Wednesday. The Senate is expected to approve the following day and send it to President Truman for veto or acceptance.

The measure extends rent controls through next February and permits rent increases up to 15 per cent when tenants and landlords agree on leases running through 1948.

Truman Favors Present Law

Mr. Truman has urged Congress to extend the present law without change for a year beyond the present June 30 expiration date. But proponents of the bill approved by Senate-House conferees say the President will have to take that or nothing.

Senator Cain (R., Wash.), a member of the conference group, called the bill "a terrific improvement over what we have now," but Senator Taylor (D., Idaho) and Representative Spence (D., (Ky.) who refused to sign the conference report, disagreed.

"The conference bill is just a booby trap and a hollow shell providing no protection whatsoever for tenants," Taylor told a reporter.

GOP Leader Sees Little Chance of Admitting 400,000

By Alex H. Singleton
Associated Press Staff Writer

Chances for admission of 400,000 homeless European war refugees to the United States tumbled yesterday with word from a House Republican leader that there is scant likelihood of the bill's passage this session.

A House Judiciary subcommittee now is considering a measure by Representative Stratton (R., Ill.), supported by the State Department, to admit 100,000 displaced persons annually for the next four years. But Republican Congressmen declared that even if the measure emerges from the subcommittee it has no possibility of winning Congressional approval this year.

Members of the subcommittee, headed by Representative Fellows (R., Me.) are talking of visiting the displaced persons' camps in Europe after Congress adjourns to determine future action.

"Should Go Home"

Representative Gossett (D., Tex.), a member of the subcommittee, declared that the legislation "should never pass" and the displaced persons camps "ought to be closed."

"Those who can go home should go home," he said in an interview. "Let the others shift for themselves. They've been pulling our leg long enough."

Aside from the report of the Republican spokesman, it appeared evident from the congressional timetable that there is little chance of congressional action this year. The calendar for the next 40 days is crowded with priority legislation, including appropriation bills to finance the Government.

IRO Measure Delayed

The House had held up action on a measure authorizing United States participation in the International Refugee Organization which is scheduled on July 1 to take over from UNRRA the care of approximately 900,000 refugees remaining in the displaced persons camps. Most of these are in the British and American occupation zones.

Meanwhile West Virginia's two Senators took opposite sides in radio speeches. Senator Kilgore (D.) declared that this country has an obligation to admit some of the displaced persons and that they "have much to contribute to American life." Senator Revercomb (R.) said that "we cannot ignore the existence of a shortage of housing here."

Jackson Warns Red Ideology Outstrips Democracy Since War

Hanover, N. H., June 14 (U.P.).—While he is convinced that war with Russia can be avoided, Associate Justice Robert H. Jackson of the United States Supreme Court, warned today that since the war "the drift of the world has been more toward Russia's system" of government than to that of the United States.

The chief American prosecutor at the Nuernberg war crimes trials told the Dartmouth College graduating class that the "drift is proceeding even in countries such as England where it owes little, if anything, to Russian pressures."

He said he believes war with the Soviet Union can be prevented but added that there is some "question" whether the "severe and bitter" struggle between the United States and the Kremlin to expand their respective spheres of influence "will result in armed hostilities."

Russia Given Advantage

He said America's postwar policies thus far have failed to transplant democracy successfully on liberated soil. Asserting that for example, not one liberated country yet has adopted "our constitutional democracy . . . not one has copied our bill of rights."

"We have put Russia in a position of tremendous advantage in dealing with timid, demoralized and war-weary peoples," he said. "They know that she has armed forces in the occupation areas several times the number of our own; that delay in making peace defers indefinitely the departure and demobilization of the Red Army and that even then the Russian influence will be backed up permanently by armed forces nearby.

"For those who believe ardently in our system and way of life, it is baffling and deflating to find so much of the liberated world rejecting our leadership and example in economic, political, moral and intellectual matters."

Jackson said there are many reasons for America's lack of success in Europe. He listed:

1. The large-scale withdrawal of U. S. troops and arms "at panic speed" immediately following VJ-Day. He said this rapid redeployment made our late enemies and allies to doubt "American understanding of the magnitude of the reorganization that was pending in Europe and to question our determination to stand by really democratic forces until they could establish themselves."

2. Diminishing United States military forces in Europe left our representatives there "with support that is comparatively inadequate to their tasks."

Soviet Propaganda Underestimated

3. Failure of the United States to "appreciate the skill and effectiveness of Soviet propaganda appeals to the depressed peoples of the world" and, at the same time, a tendency to "overestimate" the effectiveness of our own programs.

4. A fatalistic and "hysterical" feeling here at home which has undoubtedly influenced the actions of our Government as well as those of the Russians. He said this country has "become fairly hysterical suddenly to realize the only real truth in the slogan 'one world' is that we have no place else to go."

"Some Americans react violently to the discovery that, after all, there are at least two worlds and jump to the conclusion that we must fight it out to show ours is the better," he said.

"I am satisfied that Russia intends, without resorting to armed aggression, to use other methods not outlawed in the Nuernberg compact to match us in competition for the favor of other peoples.

Russian Infiltration Certain

"Such weapons include peaceful infiltration of their societies, support of underground movements, capitalizing (on the) threat of military measures short of war, incitement to revolution and propaganda appeals.

"We must expect Russia at all times to take full advantage of any pacificism or want of preparedness on our part. But, I think a dispassionate review of circumstantial evidence is convincing that the Soviet leaders want at all hazards to avoid actual war with the United States—at least in the near future."

Jackson said he does not believe the United States can hold to an "intelligent and consistent policy . . . if very public man who differs with prevailing conceptions or misconceptions is to be branded a Communist."

Monkeys Overrun City In India, Attack People

Allahabad, India, June 15 (U.P.).—The city of Allahabad is overrun by monkeys that are attacking people wholesale, but are too smart to be trapped.

Not only do the monkeys get into houses and destroy furnishings, they also waylay and attack women, men and children. Many of the victims have had to be treated at hospitals.

Hackers Again Seek Limit On Number of D. C. Taxicabs

By Murrey Marder
Post Reporter

Government cutbacks are bringing new fears to the pocketbook-conscious taxicab industry here.

"We're getting it from both ends," declared one cab company spokesman.

"Government workers, either already fired or expecting the ax any minute, are deserting cab riding for buses and streetcars—and we're fearing a new flood of former Government people into the cab driving business any day."

This fear, which already has some basis in fact with a number of former Government employes knocking on the doors of taxicab fleet operators, is bringing new interest in the hackers' favorite subject—cab limitation.

"If you took all the cabs in the District and lined them up bumper to bumper I'll bet they'd reach almost to the moon," some of the more garrulous, less exact District cabbies will tell you.

Actually, according to statistics of the Public Utilities Commission, the bumper-to-bumper line would start petering out several miles before it reached Fort Meade, Md.—which is still a long line of taxicabs.

As of June 6, PUC figures show, there were 7172 taxicabs operating—or authorized to operate—in the District. This compares with 7146 on the same date last year.

9556 Cab Licenses

There were 9556 cab licenses as of March 31, 1947, but there was nowhere near that number of cabs on the street. PUC records also show that of that figure 1581 licenses were not in actual use, which left a net taxicab operating figure of 7975. The figure has been dropping since.

A taxicab owner may retain his license even when his cab is off the street, which accounts for the difference of 1581 licenses. At present, PUC has 7392 licenses outstanding, but 220 of them are not in use.

Reasons vary for the large number of licenses not actually in use as of March 31. Cab owners say it was because they took out licenses for old cabs which they hoped to repair.

PUC says a contributing factor was talk of impending cab limitation. Apparently some of these vehicles have now been junked or converted to passenger cars.

During 1946, a total of 10,260 cabbies passed through the office of Police Hack Inspector Lieut. Joseph D. Harrington to obtain taxicab operators' permits—not to be confused with taxicab licenses. These permits are valid for a year from the date of issue. Since January, 4600 have been renewed, and Harrington says the yearly total will approximate that of last year.

In general, then, the number of cab licenses and cab operators is still about the same as in 1946, although the average cabbies' earnings have nose-dived.

Estimates of the average cab drivers' earnings are about as much at variance as the hackers' political views. Some say earnings are off one-third, some claim 50 per cent. All claim, vehemently, that Washingtonians are pinching pennies, with tips way down.

Controls Sought

Two bills are in the congressional mill aimed at cab limitation. PUC Chairman James H. Flanagan sponsored one, to eliminate part-time cab driving by persons who have full-time jobs.

The other bill, for which Edwin A. Glenn, president of Silver Fleet Cabs, claims sponsorship, would limit cabs here to 500 per 100,000 population. That goal would be reached in 3 to 5 years, by withholding license applications from newcomers.

Glenn says that bill will also limit hacking to full-time drivers. Both legislative proposals are still before the Senate District Committee's Subcommittee on Public Utilities. Hearings were held on them last month.

In March, 1946, a study made by a national research organization and released here by PUC, showed New York City had one cab per 574 population, and Los Angeles one per 2956 persons.

Last month the Census Bureau released a new estimate of Washington's population as of July 1, 1946—843,000.

With 7146 cabs operating here at that time, that averages out to about one cab for each 117 persons, a record-breaking figure for Washington and by far the largest number of taxicabs per capita in the world.

So next time you hail a cab in the District, don't be too surprised if one practically climbs over the curb in eagerness. Those other 116 people are probably taking a shower.

Welfare Association Reports Problems at Critical Stage

Chicago, June 15 (AP).—Public assistance problems "are becoming critical throughout the Nation," the American Public Welfare Association reported today, citing reports of last February.

"General relief caseloads are going up fast," the association said. The survey said the public assistance situation reflected "increased unemployment and high living costs" in major labor centers.

The total general relief caseload for the Nation in February was 344,000 compared with 258,000 in February, 1946. However, the load was far below the 1,687,000 peak of February, 1940.

Most current unemployment is among skilled workers displaced by skilled veterans. Greatest unemployment increase is in labor centers on a wide arc from Scranton, Pa., south through Savannah, Ga., west through Wichita, Kans., and north from San Diego, Calif., through Sacramento to Tacoma, Wash.

The association cited as typical of many States the situation in Minnesota, where the family relief caseload increased 35 per cent during 1946. In all but four of 19 representative major cities, caseloads in March jumped an average of 50 per cent above the low point in 1945.

Monthly relief costs in Pennsylvania more than doubled between June, 1945, and May, 1947—from $520,000 to $1,260,000. Pennsylvania's caseload jumped from 18,900 to 30,500 in the same period. Arkansas has provided 12 million dollars in welfare funds for the next biennium compared with eight million dollars for the last. South Carolina's appropriation for the next fiscal year was raised from $4,300,000 to $5,200,000.

Educator Calls Teachers 'Forgotten Figures'

Medford, Mass., June 15 (AP).—Kenneth C. M. Sills, president of Bowdoin College, said today that teachers are the "forgotten figures" of America's educational crisis.

Sills, speaking at the college's annual commencement exercises, told 674 graduates that "the profession of teaching may dry up at the source unless the crisis is met by an aroused public which will make the profession attractive and compensation adequate."

United States Representative Joseph M. Martin, jr. (R., Mass.), Speaker of the national House, was awarded an honorary degree of doctor of laws.

Chinese Reinforce Sinkiang

Nanking, June 15 (AP).—China reinforced its frontier garrison in Sinkiang Province today after apparently winning the battle of Peitashan against invaders from Outer Mongolia, a progovernment report said.

The government-controlled Central News Agency asserted the eastern Sinkiang city, 50 miles from Outer Mongolia's border, changed hands several times before the invaders finally were ousted June 8.

Central News carried a report from an investigation mission at Peitashan which said a cavalry battalion supported by five warplanes with Soviet emblems attacked at noon, June 5.

Russia has denied its planes took part in the border clash.

[The United Press said a spokesman for the Ministry of the Interior declared the Mongolians had penetrated 200 miles into Chinese territory and that "it is a mistake for anyone to regard the invasion as an ordinary border incident."]

[Moscow radio said Outer Mongolia admits there has been a clash on the Chinese border, the United Press reported. But Mongolia asserted the Chinese invaded its territory and, in a sharp protest to China, reserved the right to seek compensation and punishment of those responsible, the broadcast added.]

Chinese Communists were pressing their drive in northeast China, severing nearly all rail arteries linking Peiping and Tientsin with the outside world.

Associated Press Correspondent John Roderick reported from Peiping the Communists also were stepping up their blows against Kirin and Szepingkai in Manchuria.

He said dispatches declared Communists lobbed more than 10,000 artillery shells into Kirin.

Observers in Peiping said Communist attacks appeared to be timed with withdrawal of the last 1500 U. S. Marines from Tientsin. The Marines themselves were unaffected, proceeding from Tientsin in small ships to nearby Tangku, their point of embarkation.

Turkish Youth Group Views Wrong Movie

Ankara, Turkey, June 15 (U.P.).—The Turkish museum of historical events sent the wrong movie film today and the Turkish youth organization, which expected to see a film on the life of the late President Kemal Ataturk, stopped the show.

The film the museum sent was made by President Ismet Inonu 15 years ago, when he was premier. He spoke in favor of Turkish-Russian friendship.

Officials said the switch of the film was probably accidental but that they were investigating.

Europe Needs Aid at Once, Says Welles

By the United Press

Former Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles last night called on the Government to put more than words behind its anticommunism policy until European nations can agree on a common economic reconstruction program.

He said he was a "convinced believer" in the need for this Nation to do all it can to speed creation of a United States of Europe, but he added that even economic cooperation "must require a considerable period of time."

"In the meantime," he said in his weekly Mutual broadcast, "the crisis which has developed in Europe is so urgent, the needs of the democratic peoples so critical, that American help must not be delayed."

He backed fully President Truman's plan for halting the spread of communism in Europe, but he said that "where we have failed is in the implementation of that policy."

Referring to Secretary of State George C. Marshall's recent statement that the European nations should cooperate in determining their common needs and in arriving at the best method of speeding up their reconstruction, Welles described the declaration as "one of the most constructive pronouncements made by this Government in a period of many years."

He urged that Marshall's suggestion be advanced under the auspices of the United Nations Economic Council for Europe.

Communist Peril Slight, Declares Austria President

Vienna, Austria, June 15 (U.P.).—President Karl Renner said today that Austrian democracy was strong enough to "kill in their very beginning all radical political trends engendered and launched against our country by outside nations."

Austria's "very ambitious" Communists, he said, will be given only such power as they may win in an election.

Renner, a Social Democrat serving as nonpartisan president, rejected any suggestion that the government was in danger of being overthrown or subjected to political pressures such as those in Hungary and elsewhere in the Balkans.

Austria's recent "not very serious" crisis, caused by secret talks between Ernst Fischer, Communist leader, and Chancellor Leopold Figl and other members of the People's Party, could not be attributed to any "outside interference," he added.

The Communists won only five out of 165 Parliament seats in the November 25, 1945, election.

Artist Suspect In Wife's Slaying Free Under Bond

Atlanta, Ga., June 15 (U.P.).—Artist Paul Refoule, unstrung after his arrest on moral charges, rested tonight at the home of his still loyal mother-in-law, who went his bond, although he now was called a suspect in the slaying of her daughter.

Tuesday a Fulton County grand jury will hear the evidence on which he was arrested. The charge carries upon conviction a possible life sentence.

Refoule spent five hours in jail before his $10,000 bond was arranged by members of the family of Mrs. W. Ott Alston, the prisoner's mother-in-law.

Washingtonians Voice Views On School Lunch Program

Residents interviewed by The Post Poll were assured their names and opinions would not be divulged. Comments presented here were obtained in spot interviews in the downtown area.

Mrs. Ceres Caldwell Estep, 1126 N. Highland st., Arlington, Va., was most enthusiastic about having schools provide a free hot lunch for all school children.

Mrs. Estep

"If we can afford to have public schools and if books can be free, then there is no reason why lunches cannot be free also," the attractive mother of three said.

She described the free lunch program as a "great advantage to lower income families and also to working mothers." The "most important element in our population is our youth," she pointed out, "and most of them are poor and don't receive the proper food even at home."

Mrs. Estep said she was opposed to permitting some children to pay for their meals and others to receive them free because "it gives the child who doesn't pay an inferiority complex" which he may "carry through his whole life."

Firmly opposed to the free lunch program was John H. Scott of 1939 Calvert st. nw.

The unmarried Treasury Department employe told an interviewer:

Scott

"I didn't have a free lunch when I went to school, and I think it's up to the parents to furnish their children with lunch."

He said he felt children should be urged to earn their own money to buy their lunches because it would "teach them a lot." I had to do it when I was a boy," he added.

Asked whether he thought many Washington school children undernourished, Scott said:

"I don't notice it—not from appearances, anyhow."

* * * *

Mrs. H. Leverett Jacobi, wife of a Marine Corps captain, thought the plan a swell idea.

"I think a hot lunch is good for anybody," pretty Mrs. Jacobs said. "Probably a lot of the kids would get better meals under such a program than they ever would otherwise."

Mrs. Jacobi

She expressed the view that those youngsters whose parents could afford to pay for their luncheons "definitely" should do so.

But, she pointed out, it is those who cannot pay who are in greatest need of increased nourishment. Mr. Jacobi said it was difficult to tell whether many local youngsters are suffering from undernourishment.

The Jacobis are living at the Willard Hotel.

* * * *

A 23-year-old father of two children highly approved the free-lunch program.

Some mothers, William C. Glenn said, "Can't afford to give their children proper food. And all youngsters need an adequate diet for energy and good health, he pointed out.

Glenn

Glenn, who lives at 1764 Corcoran st., described the plan as a "great help" to low-income families. But he felt that those who could afford to pay for the school-provided hot lunches "should do so."

He expressed the opinion a "lot of District school children are undernourished."

Glenn is a bellman. His children are 2 years old and 10 months, respectively.

* * * *

"Personally, I think the schools should provide free hot lunches," said Mrs. J. T. Noell, of Beverly Plaza, Alexandria.

Mrs. Noell

"Lots of children leave home without having had a good breakfast and really don't get enough to eat," the elderly grandmother said.

In addition, she pointed out, many mothers work and don't have the time to prepare and serve the kind of meals that youngsters need to keep healthy and strong.

She said the meals should be made available to all but should be free "just for those who can't afford to pay."

* * * *

The free lunch plan won enthusiastic support from E. A. Williams, of 246 35th st. ne., foreman of a laundry and dry cleaning plant in Silver Spring.

Williams

"I think it's a good idea," he said.

"I'd like to have a hot lunch myself during the day, and I guess the children do too."

He expressed the view that many children come from poor families and are unable to get the kind of food needed to make them healthy and strong. If they didn't get certain of their food needs at school, he said, a good number wouldn't get them "at all."

The lunches, he said, should be free "just to the one who couldn't afford to pay themselves."

Williams is married but has no children.

French Communist Leader Accuses U. S. of Coal 'Deal'

Paris, June 15.—Jacques Duclos, parliamentary leader of the French Communist party, criticized the Ramadier government and the United States today in a sharply worded speech at Lille, in northern France.

He told a crowd of 3000 the Communists were "chased out of the government" by Premier Paul Ramadier last month because they "refused to allow French capitalists to hang on to their billions and opposed a foreign policy which jeopardized France's independence."

Duclos acknowledged that the United States was increasing its coal exports to France, but pointed out that the French were getting less coal from the Ruhr. "The reason for this," he said, "is that we have to pay twice as much for coal coming from the United States. That's what our credits are being used for. It explains why we're being refused additional coal from Germany."

27 Officers and Professors in Portugal To Be Purged on Charges of Conspiracy

Lisbon, Portugal, June 15 (AP).—The Portuguese government announced this morning that secret files had been found disclosing a revolutionary conspiracy and that 13 army and navy officers and 14 university professors would be purged as a result.

A communique issued after a cabinet meeting said the secret files disclosed the names of persons connected with the conspiracy and the government said it was determined to eliminate "professional revolutionaries" from the military and civil services.

The first to go, the communique said, will include two naval officers and 11 army officers who were pensioned subject to further prosecution and possible deportation.

Includes Republic Pioneer

Among the officers pensioned in today's decree was Vice Admiral Jose Mendes Cabecadas, who was the first interim President of the republic after the 1926 revolution.

Other officers included four who recently were sent to Africa on a special mission. They are Lieut. Capt. Manuel Lourenco Neves Pires Dematos, general of the Reserve Jose Garcia Marques Goudinho, Brigadier of Artillery Vasco de Carvalho, Brigadier of Engineers Eduardo Corredeouro Martins and Air Brigadier Antonion Maia. Another was Colonel of Cavalry Carlos Tavares Alfonso Dossantos, known as a playwringht under the name of Carlos Selvagem.

Admiral Mendes Cabecadas was one of the pioneers of the republic, leading the revolt of October 5, 1910.

The communique also said a large number of civilians had been arrested and the government contended there was a connection between the planned military revolutions and Communist outbursts last month which included dock strikes and student demonstrations.

"Professionals" Blamed

The decisions announced today were made at a cabinet meeting presided over by Premier Antonio de Oliveira Salazar. All members of the government were reported present and voting for the punishment and repression of the alleged revolutionary activities.

The communique said "professional conspirators" had influenced the army and navy officers and that several groups had been organized to promote revolution against the government, but that they had fought among themselves.

The announcement said the government knew about the conspiracies all along but took no steps until efforts in April to sabotage military planes "proved too much for the patience of the government." It said there was evidence showing that cash payments had been made to saboteurs with the knowledge of some officers.

The government cautioned all university professors against "misleading youth and encouraging them into political activities."

Governors' Parley To Be Held in Utah

Chicago, June 15 (AP).—Governors of the States and Territories will hold their thirty-ninth annual Governors' Conference in Salt Lake City July 13-16 as guests of the State of Utah and of Gov. and Mrs. Herbert B. Maw, it was announced today.

National headquarters of the Governors' Conference said the conferees would discuss tax and fiscal policy, education, housing, labor legislation, problems of national preparedness and the organization and administration of State government.

"Dollar shortage" DANGER

What will it mean to American business men, the American farmer and the American worker and miner if foreign countries stop buying as much goods as they are now buying from the United States?

It is significant that on the average, every tenth factory worker depends on exports for his job; practically every other person engaged in the production of cotton or tobacco depends on exports for his material existence; and every third or fourth wheat farmer is vitally dependent on wheat exports. A sharp drop in exports will directly affect the jobs and income of all American workers, farmers and business men.

The Wall Street Journal recently front-paged the growing "dollar shortage" abroad which threatens to turn into a dollar famine by the end of the year. The article states:

"It's a (dollar) famine that will hit the American business man hard. U.S. exports currently equal nearly 10% of national income...the top 10% that could mean the difference between prosperity and trouble. Ready world markets had been counted on to take up the slack as industry's production catches up with domestic demand.

"In plain language, the so-called 'dollar shortage' means that foreign nations are not producing and selling to the U.S. enough goods to pay for U.S. goods shipped abroad. In short, exports are siphoning American dollars out of world markets faster than we pump them back by buying abroad. This is the substance of a series of foreign economic surveys being prepared for the White House by the State, Treasury and Commerce Departments.

"This year the experts figure that the United States will export $15 billion of American merchandise. It will buy only about $7 billion of foreign goods. That means that U.S. customers overseas will run a net deficit of about $8 billion this year on their trade balances.

"As one State Department official put it: 'If that keeps up very long our customers will have no money left to buy with.'

"Currently foreign trade is again accounting for more than 10% of total production. If it drops off as much as 2 or 3 percentage points, the experts say, it will cut a big swath through the postwar prosperity...especially if the U.S. is already having a mild 'recession' at home.

"To export profitably the U.S. must either keep imports at a high level too, or else find some other way to get dollars abroad. Otherwise, the foreign customers simply run out of the means to buy, no matter how badly they want American goods.

"The (dollar) shortage will become acute first in the European countries, probably in the fall. The sterling area and Latin America will be in real difficulty next winter and spring, according to the calculations, unless something is done."

What are we doing now to prevent this sharp drop and the resulting unemployment in the making? It is a certainty that this Nation, the world's most powerful, cannot afford to sit back doing nothing while the elements that make for economic sickness are permitted to go unchecked.

We believe the Congress of the United States should immediately take two broad steps to meet the impending situation:

1. Develop an American program of economic investment and assistance for other nations consisting of credits, grants, and the purchase of strategic and critical materials in large enough amounts to help these other nations to help themselves in a practical way in their reconstruction so that they can effectively contribute to the prosperity and peace of the world.
2. Develop an American economic and investment program for the United States calculated to increase our own national strength and wealth through building and developing our schools, our houses, our hydro-electric power, and our other resources. For on America's strength and prosperity depend the peace and prosperity of the whole world.

The time for action is now. Delay is a luxury that the American business man, the American farmer and the American worker and miner, cannot afford.

Text of Acheson's Address At Wesleyan University

The text of Undersecretary Acheson's address at Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., yesterday, aside from introductory remarks follows:

ONE who is bringing to an end a considerable period of service in the field of foreign affairs is naturally in a mood of appraisal and review. Have we conducted ourselves in the great world in these past six or seven years true to the traditions of our republic and to the interests of the American people? I am, of course, prejudiced, but the answer seems to me not difficult. I think it is, yes, we have.

To judge this answer, we have to ask, what are these traditions and these interests? They seem to me simple, even platitudinous. The basic, underlying, never-varying tradition of this republic is insistence upon the liberty of the individual, the worth of the individual, the ultimate test of truth by reference to the individual.

This has been our political, social, and moral mainspring. It has also been the motive power of our vast development. By unleashing the enormous power of individual effort, imagination, energy, this country has attained its material position. It seems true in society, as in nature, that the greatest energy is created by releasing the power of the smallest unit. In one case, the individual; in the other case, the atom.

History and philosophy gave us this doctrine. Geography and experience have confirmed it. One of the great achievements of statesmanship in this country has been to adapt government to the furtherance of this release of the individual and not to its limitation and frustration. An outstanding illustration has been the way in which, under Mr. Lilienthal's guidance, a great governmental project, the TVA, has made power available over a vast area, not to be used by bureaucratic direction, but vastly to enlarge the individual productiveness of millions of Americans.

This belief in the individual is in our blood. It is our most fundamental characteristic. It gives a certain typical disorderliness to our behavior which baffles some foreign observers. But it can no more be separated from us than our idea of humor, our generosity toward anyone in trouble, and our mobility—we are forever going somewhere. Even though this is so, we have no desire to force our behavior and ideas on other people. If, for reasons incomprehensible to us, they want to act differently and—to us—quite misguidedly, that is their affair. But we don't like them to push other peoples around—particularly when those other peoples are trying to live as we think all decent people should live.

WITH these traditions and interests the American people approach their relations with other countries. They have a sound and unshakable belief that liberty cannot exist here or anywhere, unless there is peace founded on freedom from aggression and unless there is ever increasing productivity throughout the world. They know that while every people must attain and preserve their own liberty and free government, they can lose them from forces beyond their control when faced with fear of the attack of a foreign enemy, or with the loss of their means of livelihood.

This presents problems for those who work in our State Department. Americans want to be free and prosperous themselves. They want other people who wish to be free and prosperous to achieve those goals. But they sometimes believe that these ends can be reached by machinery or gadgets or through merely moral fervor, and without the pain of hard thinking, hard work and some real risk and sacrifice.

Some, encouraged by eminent philosophers, have thought that liberty was the natural state of man and that its universal growth and acceptance was inevitable. I do not believe that for a minute. It seems to me that liberty has come to those whose stout hearts and hard heads have won it. Here, again, we must conclude with Justice Holmes that the mode by which the inevitable comes to pass is effort.

Certainly during the decade of the 1940s this country has devoted its supreme efforts toward the preservation of the liberty of nations and individuals. In the opening years of the decade we bent our efforts toward assisting those whom the Axis was attempting to subjugate, and toward impeding its bid to dominate the two most populous continents on the globe. This may have accelerated the attack upon us. But I think that few now doubt the necessity and rightness of our course, or the extreme danger in which any other course would have placed us. The war has now been won and the threats which caused it have been eliminated. But serious threats to the continued existence of liberty have not been eliminated. These come not only from the inevitable consequences of the war itself but also from the course pursued by certain governments.

During the war constructive foreign policy was not in abeyance. It followed two objectives closely related and mutually dependent—to establish the unity, mutual confidence and cooperation of the great powers; and to create international organizations, necessarily based on the assumption of this unity and cooperation, in which all nations could together guarantee both freedom from aggression and the opportunity for both the devastated and the undeveloped countries of their own free choice. These, as you have seen, were historic American objectives. They were also the stated purposes of the Allies throughout the war beginning with the Atlantic Charter.

We did not pursue these objectives merely by exhortation or joint declaration and agreement. No people has ever given more tangible or extensive evidence of its good will and intention. Particularly is this true in our attitude toward the Soviet Union. One need mention only the most outstanding examples.

DURING the war we contributed to the Soviet Union eleven and a half billion dollars of the most vitally needed supplies. After the war, through UNRRA and governmental credits, we made available another half billion dollars worth of goods for relief and reconstruction.

In our military operations we pursued purely military objectives. The cross-Channel invasion of Europe was directed solely toward the destruction of the German armies, not the occupation of territory. And when we overran our estimated and agreed objectives we withdrew to previously agreed zonal boundaries. These were acts, not words, based upon the premise of adherence to an agreement and of mutual confidence and loyalty.

Nor were these acts all. The whole series of arrangements for settlement in eastern Europe, Germany and the Far East recognized to the full Soviet fears and interests, and were based upon confidence in their intention to carry out the pledged purposes of cooperation in Germany, respect for the right of other nations to determine freely their own course of recovery and government, and the creation of a vigorous European and world recovery.

At the same time that these steps were being taken we pushed forward the establishment of international organization. This consisted not only of the United Nations Charter designed upon the foundation of Allied unity to guarantee international security, national liberty and individual freedom, but of a whole series of special agencies which were to make sure that a favorable environment was created and maintained in which the broader purposes could be accomplished.

These were designed to provide relief in the early postwar period, to assure funds for reconstruction and development, and to stabilize currencies over the longer run, to raise the level of agriculture both as the source of food and as the activity of most of the world's population, to promote and safeguard trade between nations, to protect the health of nations against epidemics, to facilitate the exchange of ideas, knowledge and skills, to aid in the development of international transportation by air and sea—practically every activity which could encourage and make more safe, simple and beneficial relations between nations.

Unhappily the whole course of recovery and the international pursuit of happiness has suffered deeply by the failure to attain or maintain great power unity. This has come about by the Soviet Union's pursuit of policies diametrically opposed to the very premises of international accord and recovery. In eastern Europe the Soviet Union, over American and British protests, has used its dominant military position, to carry on a unilateral policy, contrary to the Yalta agreements, by which free choice of their destiny has been denied those peoples. Even more important, the minority Communist regimes fastened upon those peoples have acted to cut them off economically from the community of Europe, curtail their productivity, and to bind them to exclusive economic relations with the Soviet Union.

IN the Far East, the Soviet Union has dismantled the industries in Manchuria, has obstructed economic and political unification of Korea, and has not carried out its commitments for the return of Dairen to Chinese administration as a free port. These actions have seriously retarded economic recovery and political stability and have contributed vastly to a continuation of poverty and demoralizing uncertainty throughout the Far East.

In the Middle East, Persia has been for some years in turmoil, first through Soviet occupation of its northern territories and then through Soviet-sponsored local attempts to separate those areas from Persia.

In Greece, torn and destroyed by the war beyond any other area, the incalculably difficult task of rebuilding its plant, its production, its people's health and morale, and its governmental services, has been threatened with total defeat by Greece's northern, Communist-controlled neighbors.

Similar disappointment has followed attempts to establish a just and sound peace. It is unnecessary to recount the weary course of the Italian and Balkan peace treaties from London to Moscow to Paris to New York, or to describe the substance of those negotiations. We can note without surprise the cynical and barefaced coup d'etat in Hungary on the very eve of the Hungarian treaty's coming into effect. We note also, two years after Potsdam, that by reason of Soviet unwillingness we have not achieved German economic unification or written an Austrian treaty. As a result the recovery of Europe has been long delayed—tragically long.

This by no means exhausts the catalogue but it is enough to outline the difficulty and to indicate why it is that the United Nations, founded as I have said on the premise of great power unity, has so often been unable to apply the principles set forth in its Charter and has instead had to furnish the forum for bitter, unprofitable and inconclusive dialectics.

It would be quite wrong to leave the impression that the factors I have mentioned have been the sole cause of our present problems. It would have been serious enough that the great area east of the Stettin-Trieste line, which contributed so much to Hitler's European economy, has been exploited, disorganized and cut off from western Europe. Nature and man have added other problems. Disasters do not come singly.

Two years of crop failures in Europe and one in the Far East, the most severe winter in half a century which drained the meager coal supplies of England and Europe, and the inefficiency of the industrial plant, due to depreciation, failure of fuel and raw materials, lack of labor, and many other causes,—all these have upset all calculations of recovery. Europe has had to use its resources of foreign money and credits, carefully husbanded to restore and improve equipment, merely to keep alive.

BILLIONS of precious dollars saved for machinery, rails, locomotives, harbor equipment and so forth, have been spent for wheat and coal, and the heavy shipping charges to carry them. Financially Europe is bleeding to death, and the period of shock and crisis will come next year. Nor will the crisis be purely European. We are today selling twice the value of goods which our customers can pay for with their sales to us. This is not merely true of stricken Europe, but of our nearest neighbors, Mexico and Canada. The loss of these sales will have—as it has had in the past—a profound repercussion throughout this land.

This is a depressing but not overdrawn report. The outlook, as Secretary Marshall has recently said, is serious. But it has been blacker within the past few years. The winter of 1941-42 was such a period. The dangers of those years were overcome by determination, by courage and by endless effort. Today's problems can also be surmounted. Tragic as it is that we cannot achieve the whole promise which once seemed almost within our grasp, that is no excuse for not doing what we can. If our power to help is limited, so is the power of others to impede. And upon our side are the great urges of individual spirits throughout the world to rebuild in some way and to push on to a better day.

We can do—and are doing—many things. We can expose for all to see the shams and frauds behind which peoples are deprived of their liberty by little groups supported by foreign power. The methods have not changed basically since the days of Maximilian in Mexico, merely improved in organization, and brutality and propaganda techniques. But they dislike exposure, and it remains to be seen whether they can survive much longer than Maximilian did the withdrawal of the foreign bayonets.

We also can, and should help within the limits of our capacity those who wish to help themselves. It was such an action that President Truman proposed to the Congress on March 12 in connection with Greece and Turkey and to which the Congress so overwhelmingly responded. This was not a novel proposal or an invitation to a crusade. It was typically and traditionally American.

This country always has responded to people struggling to attain or maintain their freedom. We have done so because it is important to us that they shall succeed. Sometimes we can do much, sometimes little, but the response is always there. It was there in the case of Greece over a century ago, and in the case of Hungary and Poland and Italy. It was there throughout the nineteenth century in the struggle of the Latin American states to obtain and keep their freedom from the encroachments of European powers. It underlay our efforts for decades to help China in her struggle against foreign subjugation.

So President Truman was acting and the Congress was acting in the truest and soundest American tradition. The case was an extreme one because Greece was near the abyss. But the principle was as old as our country. It is a sensible and hard-headed principle that where our help can be effective to enable people who are sincerely striving to remain free and to solve their own problems, that help will be given.

We should, and I hope will, continue to act in this way—not waiting for extreme crises to develop, not attempting to carry all the burdens of the world or to solve all its problems, but responding in a thoroughly realistic way to the proposals of those who are exhausting every possibility of their own efforts and powers of cooperation with others to maintain places where free men may remain free.

This, as I see it, has been the course of our foreign policy over these last few years. And it is our present course. It has not created the world of our dreams. But that is not our fault. It is the best course I know of, in the world as we find it, to preserve the possibility that a better world may some day eventuate. It is the best course to preserve all that we hold most valuable in life. It is a course that requires determination, intelligence, courage and effort. It requires that Americans be made of good stuff.

"Citizens," said Milton, "it is of no small concern what manner of men ye be whether to acquire or to keep possession of your liberty."

Communists Blamed For Chile Nitrate Strike

Santiago, Chile, June 15 (U.P.).—Sixteen hundred nitrate workers left their jobs today in a spreading strike which the government blames on the Chilean Communist party.

The nitrate workers said they walked out in sympathy with the drivers of 1600 privately owned Santiago buses, who struck June 6 in protest against demands by bus owners for higher fares. Alternatively, the strikers asked better pay if the rise was granted.

President Gabriel Gonzales Videla vigorously denounced the Chilean Communist Party in a statement last night, accusing it of fomenting the strike and organizing the bus attacks which caused four deaths Thursday.

tion of the northern provinces and then through attempts to separate those provinces.

In Greece, Acheson went on, the "incalculably difficult" task of reconstruction had been threatened "by civil disturbances aided, equipped and protected by Greece's northern Communist-controlled neighbors."

He spoke also of the long delays in treaty-making, of "the cynical and barefaced coup d'etat in Hungary" and of the prevention of German economic unification, so that Europe's recovery has been "tragically long delayed."

Dealing with the economic plight of Europe as a whole, Acheson predicted that "the period of shock and crisis will come next year," and its effects would not be confined to Europe. He warned that if Europe could not go on buying American goods, there would be "a profound repercussion throughout this land."

But he was confident that the United States and Europe together could surmount the coming dangers. He hinted that Communist domination in eastern Europe might not long survive withdrawal of the Soviet armies, just as the French Emperor Maxmilian in Mexico failed to survive the withdrawal of French troops in the middle of the nineteenth century.

Historic Policy.

For the United States, he said, the right policy was to "help within the limits of our capacity those who wish to help themselves." He saw the Greek-Turkish program of last March as consistent with the historic American policy of helping foreign peoples "struggling to attain or maintain their freedom."

In spite of setbacks that were not America's fault, he said, the United States must persist in trying "to maintain places where free men may remain free."

'Pinafore' to Sail Again

His Majesty's Ship Pinafore will sail again at 8:30 p. m. June 27 in the Rockville High School gymnasium. The Gilbert and Sullivan production is sponsored by the Rockville Rotary Club. Proceeds will be divided between Montgomery County General Hospital at Olney and Suburban Hospital at Bethesda.

U. S. Prosperity Affects World, Truman Says

Cleveland, June 15 (AP).—President Truman told the International Ladies Garment Workers Union (AFL) today that our prosperity will prove a major stabilizing force to democratic countries abroad.

The comment was contained in a letter to David Dubinsky, ILGWU president, published in the union's calendar of events for its 10-day convention beginning tomorrow.

Weapons to Be Shown

Display of U. S. weapons and ordnance equipment will be held Friday night at Kensington (Md.) National Guard Armory as part of the National Guard Month observance of the local cannon company. Six Regular Army instructors will demonstrate the use of the equipment, including the 105 mm. howitzer.

Truman Names Special Board To Investigate Air Safety ate, is understood to have received consideration of the White House.

Presidential Assistant John R. Steelman said the new board will not duplicate CAB investigation work on the three recent crashes but will make recommendations "on the broad aspects of safety in air transportation."

This was taken to mean a thorough study of new navigation aids, radar and radio bad-weather landing system, airport lighting and runway inadequacies, design of airplanes, human error, pilot selection, fire prevention, noninflammable fuels and scores of other pertinent factors in modern air transportation.

Mr. Truman said in his letter to the appointees:

"This board should study the pertinent data and information relating to the program for safety in air transportation and the factors, both mechanical and human, which enter into safe operation.

To Advance Air Safety

"It should study, among other things, the recent series of accidents to determine how the findings in relation thereto can be utilized to advance air safety."

The President expressed himself as "deeply concerned" and directed the new board to make recommendations "as soon as possible and from time to time . . . in order further to promote safety in air transportation."

"The board's findings," wrote Mr. Truman, "will assist me in determining any further steps which should be taken by the executive branch of the Government to assure the highest degree of safety and to formulate proposals to the Congress for any necessary legislation."

All executive agencies concerned with aviation were directed to assist the new inquiry board and Steelman said that manufacturers and other aviation industry interests would be heard by the board.

Landis, who will head the new board, formerly was director of Economic Operations and Minister to the Middle East, wartime director of the Office of Civilian Defense, chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, a member of the Federal Trade Commission and Dean of Harvard Law School.

Board Has Much Experience

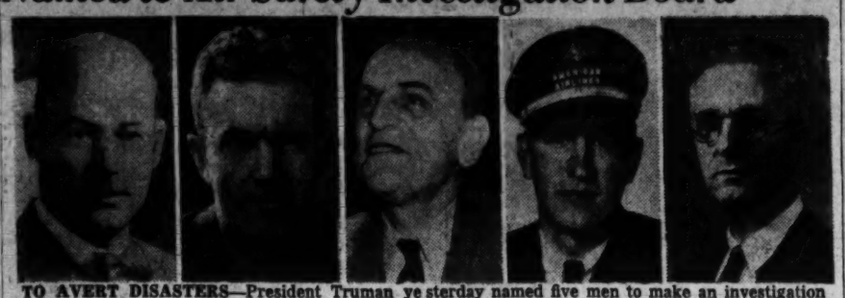
General Arnold was wartime Assistant Chief of Staff of the Army Air Transport Command and also commanded a combat wing of the Eighth Air Force in England. A West Point graduate in 1931, he studied civil engineering at Georgia Tech and received an N. S. degree at California Institute of Technology. He arranged the late President Roosevelt's flight to the Casablanca Conference.

Dr. Hunsaker is an aeronautical engineer of long experience. Graduated from the Naval Academy in 1908, he was in charge of naval aircraft design from 1916 to 1923. After serving as vice president of the Goodyear Zeppelin Corp. from 1928 to 1933, he was appointed head of the mechanical and aeronautical engineering department of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He is a member of the Research Board for National Security.

Wright, head of CAA, is an engineer long experienced in aircraft design, construction and development. He has been director and vice president of Curtiss-Wright Corp., Reed Propeller Co. and Wright Aeronautical Corp. He served with the National Defense Council as assistant chief of the aircraft division of the United States Strategic Bombing Survey. He is vice chairman of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics.

Cox is a civil engineer and has been an airline pilot for 15 years. A member of the Airline Pilots Association, Cox was nominated as the association's representative on the board by David L. Behncke, ALPA president. Cox flies the Los Angeles-Tulsa run for American Airlines.

Named to Air Safety Investigation Board



TO AVERT DISASTERS—President Truman yesterday named five men to make an investigation of air safety. Left to right they are Dr. Jerome C. Hunsaker, chairman of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics; Brig. Gen. M. W.Arnold, vice president of the Air Transport Association; James M. Landis, chairman of the Civil Aeronautics board; H. B. Cox, American Air Lines pilot, and Theodore P. Wright, Civil Aeronautics Administrator

Still unidentified was the bodies of Charles H. McCafferty, 51, manufacturers' agent, 2704 Allison st., Mount Rainier, Md.; P. J. Ness, 50, salesman, 3500 14th st. nw.; Miss Minnie Harman, 50, Red Cross worker, 1727 Massachusetts ave. nw., and Mrs. Dorothy Peters de Cray, 24, State Department employe.

Funeral services for Godwin will be held at 4 p. m. today at Christ Church, 31st and O sts. nw., and members of the United States Forest Service will serve as pallbearers. The body will be sent to Charleston, S. C., for burial.

While tearful relatives and FBI identification experts joined in trying to identify the dead at Leesburg, investigators were seeking to learn what caused the giant airliner to ram into the mountain ridge when only 25 minutes flying time from its destination of National Airport.

Civil Aeronautics Board inspectors conferred secretly for an hour yesterday after which William K. Andrews, in charge of air safety investigations for the CAB, said the inquiry at Leesburg will be done in four interlocking investigations.

These investigations will be (1) into the engines and propellors, in charge of K. C. Sonner, power plant specialist for the CAB Safety Bureau; (2) into controls, radio, frame and similar parts, in charge of Will Sievert; (3) into operating policies of Capital Airlines, in charge of R. V. Garrett, Safety Bureau operations specialist, and (4) into weather conditions, in charge of George M. French, CAB weather specialist.

Joe Fluet of the New York office of CAB will coordinate the four investigations at Leesburg.

Andrews declined to make any statement as to the probable cause of the crash. He said a preliminary statement will be made today by the CAB office here in Washington.

He was also reluctant to comment on a report that the altimeter recovered from the instrument panel of the crashed airliner showed a reading of 2000 feet, which would have been a safe height for crossing the range where the crash occurred.

The crest of the barrier against which the plane crashed is 1689 feet high.

A faulty altimeter reading was blamed in the landing crash of a Trans World Airlines Constellation at Shannon Airport, Ireland, last December 28, when 13 persons were killed.

But while investigators prowled through the charred wreckage of the Capital-PCA airliner, there were others concerned with a grim, more immediate problem—identification of the dead.

By nightfall yesterday, almost 44 hours after the big airliner had exploded against the mountainside, what remained of the 47 passengers and three crew members aboard the Chicago-to-Washington plane, had been placed in rows in the bare cemetery chapel.

White-faced FBI fingerprint experts who took over the identification job said they had been able to piece together only 48 complete bodies, among them a 10-month-old girl who died clasping a pink rattle to her breast.

FBI agents at first tried to turn the relatives away from the makeshift morgue set up in the chapel, pleading that it would be hopeless to search for a familiar face in those blackened, shapeless rows.

Text of Truman's Letter To Air Safety Probe Board

The text of Mr. Truman's letter to the special board inquiring into air safety:

The development of our air transportation system has repeatedly been recognized as a matter of vital concern to our Nation. One of the essential factors which can contribute greatly to the progress of our air transportation system, or can seriously hinder that progress, is the safety of our air transport operations. The public interest demands that every effort be made to obtain the highest degree of safety in those operations.

I am deeply concerned about this subject, especially in view of the recent accidents to aircraft of our certified domestic air carriers. I have, therefore determined that the whole problem of air transport safety in the United States should be carefully examined by a group of citizens representative of all those interests of our society to whom this safety is a matter of constant concern. Accordingly, I am appointing a special board of inquiry on air transport safety, and request you to serve as a member of that board.

This board should study the pertinent data and information relating to the program of safety in air transportation and the factors, both mechanical and human, which enter into safe operation. It should study, among other things, the recent series of accidents to determine how the findings in relation thereto can be utilized to advance air safety. It should consider also the way in which new equipment, already predictable, must be keyed to mechanical aids and human capabilities.

The board should in its discretion avail itself of all information and data in any Government department or agency, and to the extent feasible in any private agency or group which may have an interest in or contribute to the solution of this problem. In conducting its study the board is authorized to hold such public hearings as it may in its discretion determine to be desirable.

The board should present for my consideration, as soon as possible, and from time to time, recommendations as to any action on measures which it would deem appropriate in order further to promote safety in air transportation. The boad's findings will assist me in determining any further steps which should be taken by the executive branch of the Government to assure the highest degree of safety, and to formulate proposals to the Congress for any necessary legislation. Any executive departments and agencies concerned will of course give you every possible aid in this undertaking.

Crew Killed as B-29 Crashes Into Vermont Mountainside

rooted trees and burned underbrush.

The training flight was to have taken the craft to Bedford, Mass., but it was far off its course and had been out of radio contact with Bedford for an hour and a half when it roared out of rain-laden clouds at midnight and circled about this Vermont village at 1000 feet—or less.

"It was lost or in trouble—we don't know what kind," Maj. Donald Miller, who sped from Grenier Field to the scene, reported. "It circled Springfield twice, flying very low, and flashed its lights a number of times. All indications are that it was climbing when it struck the mountain."

Aviators in the area, including Albert Wheelock, a Civil Air Patrol flier, said that a difference of relatively few feet in its elevation or course—or 20 minutes in time—might have saved the plane. Swiftly clearing skies a short time after the crash made the cloud-capped mountain tops visible.

Major Miller said it appeared that all the dead except one would be identified. The task was made more difficult by the fact that the number of bodies found exceeded the number known to be aboard when the plane left Tucson.

Names were withheld pending notification of kin.

Heavy Load of Gasoline

"The explosion must have been terrific. There was quite a load of gasoline aboard." Major Miller said "the men never knew what hit them."

Pilot Wheelock, who was one of the first to reach the scene, said: "They must have come in a tremendous speed. It seemed that the right wing must have hit a tree. It seemed that this had swung the tail to the left and the plane cartwheeled into the ledge."

He expressed himself as puzzled over the plane's striking the mountain however. He said, "they couldn't have had the radar on or they would have located it."

Indo-China Crash Kills 10

Paris, June 15 (U.P.).—Ten persons were killed and two were severely burned when an airliner bound for Saigon to Dalat, French Indo-China, crashed near Djiring yesterday, the French News Agency reported today. The dead included four children and one crew member. The plane was a Junkers.

Tragic Clincher

Officials are properly delving into the basic causes of air accidents beyond the findings of on-the-spot investigators. Four terrible tragedies have taken 170 lives in less than three weeks. Certainly that is cause for searching inquiries to determine whether there is any relationship between the four separate tragedies as well as to lay bare the immediate circumstances associated with each. What action is to be taken must be left to official decision when all the facts are in. But one thing is certain. The reduction of air-safety funds by the House of Representatives should not be allowed to stand. Two weeks ago we protested that the cuts made by the House will retard progress in reducing the air accident rate, and we think that should be evident to anyone who investigates the facts. We doubt that the House realized at the time the extent to which it was dealing with a matter of life and death. In any event, the tragedies of the last three weeks have sharpened the issue for the Senate, and there ought not to be any question left about voting an adequate budget for air safety.

A President Ponders

President Truman is reported to be studying the labor bill with an open mind. His decision as to whether he will sign or veto it has not yet been made. That is a favorable sign. We cannot help thinking that the more thoroughly he analyzes the situation before him the more strongly he will be inclined to sign the bill. In the first place, the President is well aware of the dominant public demand for labor legislation at this session of Congress. His travels through the country must have given him an insight into the feeling of the rank and file about it. Mr. Truman is making a real effort to understand, weigh and give effect to the views of the people as a whole. We do not think that he will disappoint the great majority who favor the labor bill unless he finds compelling reasons to do so.

Of course, the President is being given plenty of arguments against the bill. But the all-out assaults upon it come from obviously prejudiced sources, and the more technical complaints deal largely with administrative defects. So far as these administrative defects are concerned, we must assume, as Senator Ives said the other day, that the measure will be administered with discretion and intelligence. Critics are now putting the worst possible face on every shortcoming, whereas it will be the duty of the NLRB to minimize technicalities and apply the statute as the workable policy that Congress intends it to be. Properly administered, Senator Ives confidently said, it will not destroy trade unionism but "should go a long way toward improving conditions in trade unionism."

The Senator from New York believes that no such bill would be necessary today if the National Labor Relations Act had been modified 10 years ago to correct abuses and inequities that were then apparent. Delay in dealing with the problem has caused the pendulum to swing much farther in the direction of restricting union activities than it would otherwise have done. A veto would likely stimulate a further swing in that direction at the expense of moderate and even-handed regulation of the collective bargaining process. The most important thing about the present bill, in Senator Ives' opinion, is that it is not an end product. It sets up the machinery for early correction of any defects that may show up in administration of the measure.

We think this fact should make a strong appeal to the President. It gives him an opportunity to sign the bill with a statement of objections for early consideration by the joint congressional committee that would be immediately set up to study future labor legislation. Signature of the bill by Mr. Truman would also encourage the appointment of a well-balanced student of the problem—probably Senator Ives—to head the joint committee. Of far greater importance, it would lift the whole controversy out of the realm of partisanship and onto the high plane of factual analysis.

President Truman must see that a veto of the labor bill would throw the delicate labor-management relations problem into the hottest center of the 1948 campaign. It would kindle class bitterness and leave the NLRB to apply the new law—for it would undoubtedly be passed over a veto—in an atmosphere of confusion, hostility and partisanship. Only a really vicious bill would call for a veto in these circumstances. And instead of being vicious, the labor bill, imperfect though it is, must be rated far over on the constructive side.

Armour's Job

The reentry of Norman Armour into the State Department as Assistant Secretary of State marks a further step in the Marshall reorganization. The Secretary is intent, apparently, upon reorganizing the State Department along functional lines, though this is a process that was under way before he arrived, as shown, for example, by the appointment of an Assistant Secretary for Communications. Assistant Secretaries there used to be for Latin America and for Europe, but Secretary Marshall has decided to dispense with both posts, preferring to let Mr. Armour supervise all the geographical desks. Functionalization, moreover, has already gone so far that these desks have lost a good deal of their importance, not only because some of their functions have been taken over by specialists, but also because of the establishment of a policy board under Mr. George Kennan. The setup approximates more and more the setup in the War Department, and is doubtless a gain in efficiency.

However, there may be some disadvantages to lumping all the geographical desks under one head. Mr. Armour will presumably be a sort of backstop in the State Department for our U. N. delegate, Mr. Austin. Hitherto we have felt that the U. N. deserved recognition by the appointment of an Assistant Secretary for U. N. affairs. It remains to be seen whether this reform is made unnecessary by the advent of an over-all Assistant Secretary. As against the fact that he has not been identified with the inception or the operation of the United Nations, there is the fact that he will of course be able to channel the ideas of the office in charge of United Nations Affairs to Secretary Marshall. Why not, however, have called Mr. Armour Assistant Secretary in charge of United Nations affairs? That could have been the titular umbrella covering all the geographical desks.

A question also arises whether the loss of an Assistant Secretary of State specifically for Latin American affairs may be repaired altogether by over-all authority. Our relations with Latin America are in a special category, being attached to a regional system of cooperation. Moreover, the recognition of the importance of our relations with Latin America through a special Assistant Secretary was beneficial to the United States interest in Latin America. In short, there are many factors to be weighed in the balance in reorganizing our diplomatic arm besides efficiency of operation.

Mr. Armour's help is necessary to Secretary Marshall and the two Undersecretaries, Messrs. Lovett and Clayton, because of Mr. Armour's familiarity with the men in the field and the traditional ways of diplomacy. The new Assistant Secretary has had a long experience in the State Department. He is suave as well as knowledgeable. Like a diplomat of the old school, he is not identified with any particular school of thought, only with the prosecution of American policy. To be sure, in his wartime embassy at Buenos Aires, he was not able to enlist the Argentine's entry into the war, but one doubts whether any ambassador could have done that. He takes office at a time when his chief preoccupation will be with his old stamping ground in Latin America. In this respect his word will be very important. Our relations with Latin America are in process of being re-crystallized, though, if that be around an arms program, it will make not for peace but for trouble.

Lend-Lease Pipeline

Australia gave the United States a check last year for 20 million dollars, part of which covered payment for lend-lease materials that were in the pipeline at the close of the war. Our Government accepted the check, but Congress forbade delivery of such goods after December 31, 1946, and when strikes and other circumstances made it impossible to complete deliveries before that date, the Treasury was left in the embarrassing position of having accepted money for goods which it was, and still is, unable to deliver. In the case of Belgium the injustice resulting from this foolish restraint upon the completion of lend-lease contracts is scarcely less flagrant. Belgium gave to the United States more in reverse lend-lease than we gave to her. To even the scales in some measure the Treasury agreed to let the small amount of lend-lease goods still in the pipeline go to Belgium. But these deliveries also were cut off by the above-mentioned restriction.

President Truman has now asked Congress for a new deficiency appropriation to permit these and similar contracts with a total of 11 nations to be fulfilled. Actually no additional funds are needed. Congress has only to remove its restriction on funds already appropriated. For that matter, governments with which we had contracted for the sale of pipeline equipment put up $825,000 some months ago to pay the administrative expenses of the Treasury in carrying out these contracts. But the Comptroller General ruled that this fund could not be so used—that the purpose of Congress was to halt all lend-lease shipments at the end of last year.

The reason why Congress has not relaxed its arbitrary restriction is that a large portion of the 25 million dollars worth of goods involved would go to Russia. Of course, we ought not to be supplying Russia with lend-lease goods when she is carrying out an aggressive policy of setting up Communist regimes in the Balkans in defiance of the will of the people. But the equipment in question has for the most part been made to Russian order; it is of virtually no value to us; and we are under solemn agreement for its sale. We cannot break that agreement without losing face in the world, trampling on our own self-respect and closing the door to any reasonable settlement of our much larger lend-lease account with the Russians. Regardless of what we do in the case of Russia, however, there is not the shadow of an excuse for breaking our pledge to 10 other nations to deliver them the remaining goods in the lend-lease pipeline.

Foreign Policy Council

Senator Vandenberg has brought into the realm of active discussion a useful idea that is by no means new. He suggests "the prompt creation of a special bipartisan advisory council at the highest attainable level as a center of coordination and as a further source of advice to both the executive and the Congress" in the sphere of foreign policy. A similar proposal was made recently by Charles Cheney Hyde, a former solicitor of the State Department and president of the American Society of International Law. It won a good deal of approval, including our own. In a time when our Government must make decisions of such far-reaching and momentous character as greatly to influence the future of the world as well as that of the United States only the ablest and most seasoned advice that can be obtained will satisfy the national need.

Senator Vandenberg properly relates his suggestion to the great American policy that is now taking shape. As a Nation, we have decided that we must help other peoples who are fighting to regain economic and social stability and to preserve their freedom and independence. That policy has assumed tangible form in the aid we are about to give to Greece and Turkey. How shall it be implemented elsewhere? Secretary Marshall has now addressed himself to the much greater specific project of reconstruction in Europe. Senator Vandenberg recognizes the importance of "facing this problem on an over-all basis instead of dealing with unanticipated crises, one by one." He agrees also that our own self-interest demands that we "meet the situation with vision and courage." But he insists that American resources as well as our will to be helpful must be considered. How far can we go in a great rehabilitation effort without straining our own economy and the willingness of our people to advance the necessary assistance? The answer must rest on a thoughtful survey of domestic resources, policies and trends of thinking as well as a full understanding of world needs and keen appreciation of the role we must play to bring about the sort of peace that can endure.

From this viewpoint a council of elder statesmen to give advice on foreign affairs would be most useful. But another argument for such a council seems to us to carry even greater weight. If the policy upon which we are embarking is to be successful, it must be kept above partisan controversy. It must represent the will of the people regardless of party affiliations, and nothing would be so effective in rallying that kind of support and checking mere partisan criticism as the creation of an advisorate including the wisest heads of both parties.

Of course, it would not be the function of this body to take foreign policy out of the hands of the President and the Secretary of State. The whole responsibility would continue to rest in those officials. But an advisory council could quietly point out the strength or weakness or necessary limitations of policies in the formative stage. It could possibly foreshadow what the public reaction would be both here and abroad. And it could probably bring the collective wisdom and experience of our people to bear upon foreign policy more effectively than any other device that has been suggested. We scarcely need to say that its personnel would have to be chosen from men and women whose statesmanship had already been demonstrated. No one would be chosen because he belonged to either party but because of his intellectual stature regardless of party. We should expect an advisorate of this character to be so great an asset that no future administration would likely venture upon the formulation of foreign policy without one.

PENNY PLAIN—TUPPENCE COLORED

(Oaxaca)

Begin with the plaza of Indian-laurel trees and its church with the cavernous doors and the pierced tower where Cortez put the Spanish-speaking clock.
Draw the streets straight and long; spokes of a wheel with its far rim fretting the wastes of sand, whirling up a mirage . . . deepening distance.
Take the city whole; round it like a pearl set in the shell of a wide shallow valley.
Now any color to name. Only iridescence.
Or take it street by street as the morning takes it.
String the cubes of houses like so many beads.
Let the pomegranate spill its coral seeds.
And where the market pulls the streets together, whether in shadow-etching, dark on bright or a skein of rainbows tangled with sunlight, be most concerned with sudden swarthy bronze of faces thronging. From horizon hills through the transparence of the yellow plain they have traveled for days bringing their mystery to the ancient city. Overhear them speaking not vowéled Spanish but sibilant Indian words, and the outline blurs; walls dissolve to pallor

"Governing Guam"

Your editorial of June 12, "Governing Guam," is well taken; it is accurate and just. But your suggestion that transfer of jurisdiction over these islanders from the Navy to a civilian agency might reasonably be delayed for two or three years will fill many Guamanians with dismay, for the following reason among others:

The Navy desires to have it believed that Guam rehabilitation and the settlement of the Guamanians' war damage claims can be done efficiently by no other agency than the Navy. Yet in fact, the rehabilitation of Guam's destroyed towns has been excessively delayed, and also has been planned with artificial elaborateness, by the Navy. This fact is asserted in the report of the Hopkins Committee on Guam.

Much more extreme, and perhaps irremediably damaging to the Guamanians, is the Navy's handling of war damage claims on Guam. The Hopkins Committee furnishes very severe, detailed criticism in this matter; the criticism is identical with that which reaches this institute from Guam almost daily. At the rate claims were being processed when the Hopkins Committee wrote its report, settlement would not be completed for more than 20 years; and the claims actually settled were in many cases "reduced" to mere pittances."

Their claims are all that many Guamanians possess. Under date June 5 a responsible Guamanian writes: "The Navy is paying less for the people's land now than it was worth before the war. For rentals on land which the people were denied the use of for 2½ years, the Navy is paying only 6 per cent of the value of the land on the basis of the 1940 tax assessment which was made on one fourth the value of the land."

Any bill passed by Congress on Guam should transfer to a new agency, quickly, the responsibility and the funds for rehabilitation and for the settlement of war damage claims. Otherwise, Guamanian territory and morale are going to be shattered.

Ambassador to Spain

There has been a recurrent error in The Post regarding the relationship between the withdrawal of our Ambassador to Spain and the United Nations General Assembly resolution recommending the recall of Ambassadors and Ministers from Madrid. In the issue of June 10 in a news article on the nomination of Mr. Norman Armour to the position of Assistant Secretary of State, it was stated that he left Spain, where he had been United States Ambassador, following the United Nations resolution. The New York Times of the same day referred to Mr. Armour as having left Spain last fall. June 12 in a Washington Post editorial on Mr. Messersmith's mission to Argentina it is stated that Senora Peron is "being received royally by Franco, from whose government we withdrew our diplomatic envoy in keeping with the decision of the United Nations Assembly."

Mr. Norman Armour left Spain on December 1, 1945, when he retired from the foreign service. The United Nations resolution on Spain was passed on December 12, 1946, over a year later. As Mr. Armour was not replaced, our embassy in Madrid had been headed by a Charge d'Affaires since his departure and we were not affected by the Assembly action. If we had had an Ambassador in Madrid in December, 1946, he undoubtedly would have been recalled, but such was not the case.

[Editor's note: Our correspondent is right as to the date of Mr. Armour's departure from Spain. Actually, American action to fulfill the United Nations resolution on the Franco government consisted of not replacing our Ambassador at Madrid. We brought home our Charge d'Affaires, but this was done, we understand, as a matter of routine, and a new Charge d'Affaires has lately taken his place. Other members of the U. N. have withdrawn their Ambassadors, with the exception of Argentina.]

Fetish of Solidarity

This writer has not always agreed with the views on foreign relations of able Sumner Welles, especially on his policy of appeasement toward pro-Nazi Peron's Argentina against his own country. However, his article in The Post of June 11, on "America's Critical Role," is the most accurate and comprehensive on the European situation I have read in many a day.

The first requisite is a strong bipartisan foreign policy, practising closer cooperation between our Democratic President and our Republican Congress; a durable peace should have priority over 1948 politics. We must present a solid front to Russia and to any other country that is obstructionist and noncooperative to the four freedoms—no more partisanship here, no more appeasement toward those who are lying about us and misrepresenting our peace efforts. We must be sure that we are right; then immediately proceed with firmness and with "damn the torpedoes" in mind. There is no time to lose—Russia is getting stronger, daily.

However, what Welles did not say is that the much-abused fetish of solidarity among nations is a snare and a delusion. The nation that would bore from within any association of civilized nations, be it a Hitler, a Peron, a Franco, or a Molotov, is most dangerous. Therefore, any well-meaning United Nations, whether of Europe or of Pan-America, would be better off without any of them.

The Case For Tomatoes

The article in The Washington Post of June 11, entitled "Furor in Fairlington," has given a slightly erroneous impression that we would like to correct. In speaking of the manager's decision that tomato plants have no place in the flower gardens of Fairlington tenants, it is not made clear that the tomato plants have been confined to small plots of ground at the back doors. They are not planted in flower beds in front of the houses.

The arbitrary decision of the manager to have these plants dug up in spite of the protests of the residents of this Government Housing Project, has indeed caused a furor, as it is felt that there is no excuse for this unnecessary waste. In the first place, the plants have not marred the lanscape but have helped relieve the monotony of the treeless back yards. In the second place, the plants have previously supplied each family with tomatoes during the entire season and many of this year's plants are already in full bloom. It seems quite ridiculous when the Department of Agriculture has requested people to grow as much food as possible, for the manager of a Government Housing Project to order these plants to be dug up. There are many other more useful things that can be done to enhance the beauty of the project.

It has been stated that the "tenants rent apartments but not ground." If this is the case, the tenants wonder why it has been their responsibility to keep the sidewalks shoveled in winter.

Whether or not our tomato plants are a fruit or a vegetable, and even if they are not a flower we would like to save them from being torn up. We are therefore appealing to public opinion to help us out.

Tsaldaris No Nazi

In yesterday's Washington Post an Athens cable by Mr. M. W. Fodor bears the headline: "Rich Nazi Suspect Tsaldaris Called Real Ruler of Greece." The dubbing of the vice president of the Greek Government and chief of the populist party Mr. Constantine Tsaldaris as a Nazi is a false accusation. I wish to protest against such an insult regarding a great patriot which I am sure is due to inadvertance on your part.

When Mr. Fodor reports about the "rich supporters of the regime who, according to the leftists, collaborated with the Germans," he only repeats the usual vague slander of the Communists who try to justify the bloodshed and anarchy into which they threw the country for two years with the help of Yugoslavia, Bulgaria and Albania. But what is most surprising is Mr. Fodor's attempt to cast a slur on Mr. Tsaldaris whom he describes as one of the richest men in the country, supported by rich collaborationists. Such reports only make for more confusion. They help bring tyranny to Greece from abroad and hinder the American aid by slandering the lawful government of the country which is the choice of the majority of the people. For your information, I would like to bring to your attention the fact that Mr. Tsaldaris—although he could hardly be blamed, even if he were a rich man, which he is not—is a person of very modest means which he inherited from his father long before the war. During the occupation he sold, as many people did, part of his furniture to support his family. He took a very active part in the resistance movement of the people against the Axis, and in 1943 was forced to flee the Germany tyranny by escaping into Egypt, where the Greek government in exile had its seat, which was the springboard of the Greek fighting forces. Mr. Tsaldaris remained there until the liberation of Greece, and after the elections, when his party obtained the majority of the Greek voters, he was chosen by his party as its leader. I do not know of any greater injustice than to insinuate suspicious relationship of Mr. Tsaldaris with rich collaborators. This is a vain attempt, as the Greek people highly respect him. I rely rely on your sense of fairness to publish this for which I would be much obliged to you. Many thanks.

Light Where Needed

By Mark Sullivan

"The Doctrine"

DURING THREE MONTHS America has experienced an extraordinary attempt at public enlightenment. Made up largely of conscious and official effort, partly of spontaneous contributions, the sum of it is the most vital thing in motion in the world today. The subject attempted to be explained to the country is, as commonly phrased, "the Truman doctrine."

Beginning with the address in which Mr. Truman laid it before Congress and the country March 12, there have been more than a score of addresses by top level public men, aimed specifically toward explaining the new doctrine to the country or bearing upon it. These include two formal speeches by Secretary of State Marshall, one formal statement to the country and several statements on the Senate floor by Republican Leader on Foreign Affairs Vandenberg, a formal address by Republican adviser and participant in foreign negotiations Dulles; two formal statements, comprehensive and detailed, by former President Hoover, in the form of letters to committees of Congress. In connection with the first concrete steps in the Truman doctrine, the grant of aid to Greece, the doctrine has been discussed in Congress comprehensively, with leaders of both parties participating, almost wholly in a bipartisan spirit.

THE EFFORTS of the State Department to enable the country to understand the Truman doctrine have been painstaking and far-reaching. In addition to addresses to the public by several officials, one effort by the department was extraordinarily conceived and carried out. The department devoted three days to continuous conference, informal and off-the-record but thoroughly organized for enlightenment, in which officials, including Secretary Marshall, addressed leaders of public thought whom it had invited. These included heads of church organizations, college presidents, heads of veterans organizations, labor leaders and heads of industrial groups. The aggregate of them, it was intended and estimated, represented 75 million members, every adult in the country.

The sum of the efforts toward enlightenment has been successful, the country is Truman's doctrine conscious. In an election to fill a vacancy in Congress in the State of Washington the doctrine was an issue, made so by the Republican candidate who supported the doctrine and won the election. Yet if the electors in that district, and the public generally, grasp the underlying idea of the Truman doctrine and approve it, they do not know the precise form and its details. They cannot, for the doctrine was not born full-fledged and could not be; it is not a static document in a State Department vault. It is a thing being evolved in the minds of men, and many of the addresses about it, while firmly favoring the basic idea, have been criticism contributing to the evolution. It need not be surprising if the process of evolution, changing from day to day, creates occasional mystification. Over the recent weekend, the note of puzzlement on the part of the public was conspicuous. Firm through every stage of the evolution is the condition which makes the doctrine a necessity. This was put in one sentence by former President Hoover in his letter to Senator Bridges, for publication this week: "There is greater danger of political and economic chaos in the world today than at any time since the war ended."

TO AVERT this danger, to make the world and especially Europe a going economic concern, is the purpose of the Truman doctrine. Because the first announcement of the doctrine was accompanied by a concrete step in it, the grant of aid to Greece and Turkey, it was assumed that the Truman doctrine would consist of successive separate grants to other countries on much the same basis. Quick realization that for several reasons, including impossible cost to us, this would not be the best way, led to an important step in the evolution of the doctrine. As put in a careful address by Secretary Marshall, we should not "undertake to draw up unilaterally a program designed to place Europe on its feet economically; the initiative must come from Europe." Action by the countries of Europe toward putting themselves on a self-supporting basis includes pooling of their resources, a kind of economic federation of Europe. Steps toward this are now under way, taken promptly by Britain and France, with a statement by British Prime Minister Bevin almost ecstatic in its approval of Secretary Marshall's address, which, Mr. Bevin said, "may well rank as one of the greatest in the world's history."

Joseph M. Lalley is on vacation. His column, "Posting the Books," will be resumed on his return.

Unification

A Communication

THE POST is doing a great service to the Nation in making possible a free and full discussion of the points in the merger bill (S. 758) on which there is still much disagreement. It is because of this that I take the opportunity to comment on The Post editorial of May 28.

The "certain amount of Navy opposition" to the bill could be reduced to concrete figures by a private poll. Form my contracts, discussions, and sampling I can put the figure at 99 per cent opposition.

The reference to the British "merger" seems wholly irrelevant and incompatible to the support of this bill because I have already pointed out in my communication published on May 27 the disastrous effects on the British navy, and on the outcome of the European war, by their failure to have a naval air force on the same basis as ours at the beginning of World War II.

I WOULD BE willing to confront your source of information that the Navy was not "caught completely by surprise" when the subject of a merger was suddenly thrown into the open. Your inference in the statement "the reform was not put before all ranks and ratings assembled in a sort of town meeting" is certainly not sustained by my discussions with the highest ranks at the time the proposal burst upon us.

I must agree with you wholeheartedly that the bill was "hammered out" by the top men in both branches of the armed forces. It was and is. But why? That is what still puzzles me.

Your inference that the Secretary of the Navy "instigated" the original Army and Air Force merger is not correct. The fact is that when he was confronted with their proposal he did act "with great courage and public spirit" when he had Mr. Eberstat prepare for him and with him the original Navy draft—an admirable proposal which did not include the vicious and objectionable features incorporated in the present bill. A review of the "Eberstat" bill at this time would be most illuminating. It bears little resemblance to S. 758.

I STILL emphasize the position and importance of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Do you infer that we did not win the war because of the Joint Chiefs but in spite of them? No one can point to a single operation which was nullified because of delay. Of necessity there must be discussion and even arguments between representatives of the various branches in planning complicated operations and strategy. I cannot subscribe for a moment to the statement made during the present hearings that "A bad decision is better than none at all." In tactical decisions there must be speed, but the same does not apply to strategical considerations.

As a matter of fact, the testimony of leaders during the recent hearings emphasized that even in the theater of operations, where unity of command existed, it was necessary to yield to the opinions of the various branches in decisions on joint operations because there was no one man who was expertly qualified in all the aspects of warfare. I know of no positive statements by anyone that lack of cooperation delayed victory. You quote Admiral Nimitz incorrectly and out of context when you write "Even Admiral Nimitz, now Chief of Naval Operations, says, 'My experience in obtaining directives from the Joint Chiefs of Staff leads me to believe that it will be far better to have a single commander of the armed forces who has all the authority and responsibility for issuing directives.'" I happen to know that this statement was made during the war and had no bearing on the present bill. Furthermore, I know that since the statement was made, it has been retracted by him one or more times because of changes in the situations which prompted it.

I CANNOT believe that The Post is in possesion of information regarding the state of our present war plans other than the testimony given during the recent hearings. But if it were true that a plan requested by the President in 1945 has not yet materialized it would be ridiculous to suppose it was because of intransigence that, as you say, "the Joint Chiefs of Staff cannot get together on it." When we consider that the implications of the atomic bomb have made it advisable and necessary to reexamine all previous military concepts, it would not be surprising that the Joint Chiefs have found it impossible to arrive at a sound decision. There again, a bad decision could not be better than none at all.

It should not be necessary for me to spell out the implications of the situation in which a Secretary of Defense, dominated by one branch of the armed forces (as in Germany) has the power of decision, as against a civilian deputy, responsible directly to the President and making decisions in his name without any domination of either branch. Of course, the bill provides that a Secretary of a branch can appeal to the President over the head of the Secretary of Defense, and he would, I think, do that about once. And you well know that in time of war, the civilian secretaries are without any power or influence.

When you imply that the Marine Corps would be able to defend its budget position before Congress in the face of an unfavorably disposed Secretary of National Defense, somebody's credulity is being stretched. This makes me feel that pertinent facts resulting from the recent hearings have been missed entirely. And furthermore, General Vandegrift won't be with us forever.

WHY THE POINT on amphibious operations is questioned I do not know. I must emphasize that a little research will indicate clearly that I am not on disputatious grounds when I say that the Marines developed the technique of amphibious operations. This technique was one of the greatest factors in winning the war and Army units received much of their training under Marine Corps officers. This technique was fully employed and made possible the Normandy landings. The fact that no Marines were present in Normandy does not alter my contention that the Marines are vital to "quick seizure of distant bases necessary for the Navy to carry out its function of control of the sea," and that "the Marine Corps could be abolished by an unfavorably disposed Secretary of Defense through the simple method of curtailing the budget."

I notice that you did not question the contention that naval aviation is an integral part of sea power. Let me repeat that this arm could be curtailed dangerously by the same method.

You referred to the "phantom" of military domination in connection with the National Securities Resources Board. The chairman of this board, although a civilian, is subordinated to the proposed Secretary of Defense, and this certainly provides for the same possibility of ill-considered moves when a Secretary of Defense is completely dominated by the military. The hazards of this situation have been covered already by experts in this field and I think they are capable of visualizing the effect on the vital function of coordinating military and civilian production needs.

In conclusion, I would like to emphasize the necessity of considering carefully the entire field of national security, atomic energy, and the atom bomb. Let us be certain that the step we take is not the result of emotional or spectacular demonstrations, or one that will be made obsolete by the developments of tomorrow.

E. M. ZACHARIAS.
Rear Admiral United States Navy (Ret.).
Washington.

Editor's Note: When we referred to unification being instigated by the Secretary of the Navy, we were referring to the bill, not the original plan. The inter-service agreement which was the basis of the bill, we repeat, was instigated by Secretary Forrestal. Admiral Zacharias, of course, it correct in saying that the idea of unification did not originate with the Navy.

Matter Of Fact

By Joseph and Stewart Alsop

The Nightmare

THERE IS at least a possibility that the President will ask Congress to act in the European crisis, on an interim, emergency basis, before the present session ends. In its prevailing mood, the Congress appears careless of consequences, and chiefly interested in the more squalid aspects of domestic politics. But the situation hardly permits the United States to remain passive and impotent, until a broad, carefully integrated foreign reconstruction program can be presented at a special session in the autumn. The problem will probably be discussed with the congressional leaders at the White House very shortly.

In order to understand why the President is forced even to consider confronting the hostile, vacation-hungry lawmakers with the kind of request for action they hate most, it is necessary to understand the nightmare that has begun to haunt the informed leaders of the Administration. It is, very bluntly, the nightmare of a Europe which has largely succumbed to the Soviet Union's present drive to extend its sphere of control. And this nightmare exercises a decisive influence on all planning, for the very simple reason that it is a nightmare which can come true. If the present process of economic and political deterioration is permitted to continue, and Communist regimes are thus installed in Italy, or France, or both, the nightmare will be hard, stark reality.

EVEN AT THE RISK of sounding like Chicken Little, squawking that, "the sky is falling, the sky is falling," it is worth noting the nightmare's salient features. Perhaps the quickest way to convey its flavor is to describe the purely military moves that would be demanded by American security in the event of a real European collapse. There is nothing like a plan for such moves; mercifully, there is as yet no need for a plan. But among those who might have to make the decisions, the trend of thought is pretty unanimous. If Europe goes, the United States will be forced to place permanent military establishments at the present temporary and civilian airbases in Iceland, Greenland and The Azores. The Belgian Congo, with its essential uranium deposits at Shinkolobwe, will almost certainly have to be occupied, and seriously consideration will have to be given to the occupation of Dakar, with its command of the South Atlantic.

It is pretty unpleasant, thus to reduce to concrete terms the potential consequences of European collapse. Yet, without forward bases to provide a screen for the hemisphere, without a sure and ample supply of the raw stuff of fissionable material, and without some means to protect America, what would be the position of the United States if the nightmare should come true? That is why the nightmare must now be spelled out, for all to see. In broader outline, it is as follows:

THE CENTER of worst danger is Italy, where the insecure government of Premiere De Gasperi, under intense Communist attack, is fruitlessly pleading for immediate American assistance on a large scale. Because the larder in Washington is presently empty, Premier De Gasperi's emissaries have thus far been fobbed off with crusts. Yet if Italy should go to the Communists, a reaction would be started that could continue, in a series of successive crises, until it had involved all of Western Europe. France would be endangered immediately; through France, the low countries, and so on. And if this spreading reaction were not halted, the United States would be confronted with a new situation constituting, in the words of one of those best qualified to speak, "the greatest strategic defeat in our history." The chief features of the situation can be simply listed.

First, the French-held bulge of Northern Africa would follow France. The western Mediterranean would be tightly gripped by the Soviet bloc; the eastern Mediterranean would thus be boxed off, and the vital oil regions of the Middle East would immediately become a Soviet bailiwick.

Second, by the same rule, the Belgian Congo and other European possessions in Africa would fall within the orbit of the new Soviet-dominated European system.

Third, deprived of middle eastern oil, and facing a Communist Europe, Britain would have only two choices: the British would either have to prepare to fight at once, or to do an immediate deal with Moscow, begging for any terms the Kremlin wished to offer.

AFTER PERUSING this list, it is easy to see why such startling and arbitrary measures as American occupation of strategic points far beyond our borders are regarded as contingent necessities. Yet such steps, by increasing tension, would also increase friction. So would the cruel choice that would be forced upon the British and so would the inevitable appearance in France and other western European countries of anti-Communist marquis which would demand and no doubt get support from this country. The end, in this imagined yet conceivable situation, could only be disaster—disaster utter, irretrieyable and vastly beyond description. This fact is realized by the men who read the cables. It is acknowledged in the planning papers. It is the reason why those who are responsible for formulating policy are disinclined to count the cost.

In the Congress, which the Administration has lamentably failed to educate in simple politico-strategic realities, even men of good will inquire whether the "United States can afford" to help to save Europe. But when it is a question of trying to avert total catastrophe, discussion of the fate of Representative Taber's economy program is, to say the least, somewhat irrelevant.

Washington Calling

By Marquis Childs

Timing Of European Reconstruction

ONE COMMODITY that cannot be bought with all the dollars in the world is time. And time is running out very fast.

Childs

Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg, who as much as any single individual has carried the load of our present foreign policy, says we need an inventory of our resources. We need to determine what we can do toward restoring peace and security to a broken world. It is impossible, as Vandenberg points out, to deal with a series of "unanticipated crises, one by one."

At the same time, however, we must examine without fear or prejudice the nature of the crisis which is coming on with such a rush. We must try to understand the speed with which events are crowding in.

If we are to have an inventory, then we must move quickly. The facts and figures are available both as to resources and money. The task is to put them together with skill and perception so that we can see at a glance what we can do.

There has been talk of a special session of Congress in the fall. So far this seems to be chiefly newspaper talk. When you put it up to party leaders in House and Senate, they look vague and reply that no one has discussed with them the necessity of such a session.

Let's assume that there will be a session about November 1. The President and Secretary of State Marshall put before the lawmakers the imperative need for a five-year program, at five billion dollars a year, to restore Europe. Let's suppose some more and suppose that Congress acts with a minimum of delay, adopting the Administration program and sending it to the White House on December 15. (Admittedly, this is getting into the realm of fantasy.)

EVEN WITH this express-train speed—measured by government standards—we shall be perilously close to a deadline. The dollars will run out in Great Britain and in Western Europe shortly after the first of the year. That means shipments from this country will be greatly curtailed. Far more important, it means that the whole effort of rehabilitation will, for the moment at least, come to a standstill.

This will take place after six months of uncertainty. If France and Italy still survive as free nations, it will be by a close margin. In the next six months the Communists throughout Europe, acting under trained leaders in Moscow, will exploit every opportunity for sabotage and disruption. And the opportunities will be manifold.

Our tempo is, to use a charitable word, leisurely. President Truman's message calling for 400 million dollars for Greece and Turkey was delivered on March 12. Three months were required to approve the program and name an administrator—and this for a program so small in comparison to needs.

The newly named administrator, Former Gov. Dwight Griswold of Nebraska, is now in Washington. He had to be called off from a responsible job in the Civil Administration of Germany to take this post.

Griswold, who has never been in Greece, is in Washington getting "briefed" on his extremely difficult and complicated assignment. He is picking the immediate assistants who will accompany him.

THE FIRST PAIR of shoes and the first sack of wheat are still to reach Greece under the program. The same thing is true of the general relief provided in the 350-million-dollar appropriation adopted by Congress. The timetable for the latter measure was even more prolonged. The machinery for providing the relief is only just now being set up.

If Congress acted on an overall program for Europe by December 15, many weeks would go by before it could be implemented. A major obstacle is in persuading able men to take responsible positions, as was proved again on the Greek-Turkish program.

There may not be time enough. That is the reality which no one is quite facing up to. We have already squandered so much of that commodity without price. We helped along the squandering process by such senseless acts as abruptly chopping off the lend-lease pipeline the moment the shooting war had ended.

In his statement, Vandenberg spoke of the need for the "prompt creation" of a bipartisan council to advise the President on a master plan for rehabilitation. He spoke of the "difficult national decisions which we inescapably confront." We cannot delay those decisions much longer. The hands of the clock are moving on toward midnight of the brief day that is left to us.

Seven Scientists Named to Advise Atom Commission

The United States Atomic Energy Commission announced yesterday appointment of a special medical board of review of seven scientists in medicine and biology who will advise the commission on atomic research in the medical and biological fields.

Simultaneously it was announced that the seven scientists will meet here today to begin work on one of the most vital nonmilitary phases of atomic development.

The members of the board are: Dr. Robert P. Loeb, chief of the division of medicine, Presbyterian Hospital, New York City, chairman; Dr. Detlev W. Bronk, chief radiologist, University Hospital, Philadelphia; Dr. Wallace O. Fenn, professor of biology, University of Rochester Medical School, Rochester, N. Y.; Dr. Herbert S. Gasser, physiologist, Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research, New York City; Dr. Ernest W. Goodpasture, head of the School of Medicine, Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn.; Dr. Alan Gregg, director for medical sciences, Rockefeller Foundation, New York City; Dr. A. Baird Hastings, professor of biochemistry, Harvard Medical School, Cambridge, Mass.

25.5 Pct. Increase Seen In Cost of Education

New York, June 15 (U.P.).—Higher education next fall will cost American students as much as 25.5 per cent more in tuition and fees than in prewar years, a survey of 120 colleges and universities disclosed today.

The study, made by John Price Jones Corp., fund-raising consultants, showed that tuition and fees, now at a new peak, will climb again next fall but that no resulting decline in enrollments is likely.

U. N. Progress Amazing, Says Austin

Lewiston, Me., June 15 (AP).—Warren R. Austin declared today that the United Nations had made "amazing progress" which he said "gives promise of as rapid development of collective security and peace as we ought to expect."

The American U. N. representative, in a speech delivered at the eighty-first commencement of Bates College, reported that much of the spadework readying the organization for action had been done, but that in some phases of the task "the preparatory period will continue for years."

"The patience and determination needed to carry us through," he said, "are given to us according to the measure of our consecration to the great purpose of prevention of war. We can have all that we need."

Showdown on Balkans Near

Lake Success, June 15 (AP).—Battle lines were being drawn today for a Russian-American showdown in the United Nations on the Balkans.

This became clear as the Security Council prepared to consider findings of a U. N. Balkan Inquiry Commission placing upon Yugoslavia the primary blame for support of Greek guerilla warfare, and holding Bulgaria and Albania blameworthy to a lesser degree.

The Balkan commission set a meeting for tomorrow morning here to discuss ways and means of assisting the Security Council in its discussion of the Balkan issue expected to begin June 23.

Sharply underlining the discussion will be the new Communist moves in the Balkans. Because of the present situations in Hungary and Bulgaria, the United States already has threatened to bring these issues before the United Nations unless some satisfactory settlement can be made with Russia.

Already the majority of the Security Council members are lined up against Russia on the Balkan inquiry commission's report. Russia has only the support of Poland.

Meanwhile, the commission's subsidiary investigation group which was left behind in the Balkans is running up against snags. Bulgaria twice has refused to permit the group to cross her frontier to investigate Greek charges of Bulgarian support for anti-Greek forces.

[The United Press said Sir Alexander Cadogan of Britain will ask the Security Council Monday to reopen discussion of the appointment of a governor of Trieste.

Orchard Raid Nets Frauleins, Nettles American Soldiers

Frankfurt, Germany, June 15 (U.P.).—The gray-haired American colonel quickly told the 20 military policemen why they were going with 40 German plainclothes policemen to raid an orchard five miles from Frankfurt.

The orchard, he said, was a rendezvous for drifting girls from Berlin and the Ruhr and American soldiers from a service unit. The German police were going to pick up the girls for venereal disease tests.

The MPs were going along to protect the unarmed German police from the frauleins' boy friends. Just before dusk Saturday the raiding force closed in on the orchard.

American soldiers in the orchard started hurrying their girl friends away.

MPs to the Rescue

One group of German policemen soon was hotly engaged with surprised American soldiers. The MPs went to the rescue of the German police.

The colonel personally collared four girls who tried to sneak away in the confusion. None had a labor card to show that she was working, and the colonel had them put in the patrol wagon.

The commanding officer of the service troops in the area came up and demanded to be told why his men were being discriminated against.

He said some of the girls were "good girls—they're living with the men and not drifting and they've got babies to take care of." It turned out, however, that none of the girls was married.

One Girl Released

As the German police, the MPs and the patrol wagon pulled away, couples began strolling back into the orchard again.

Fifty-three girls picked up in the raid were screened at headquarters. One was released.

The girls ranged from beauties to nightmares. Some had on fashionable dresses, some rags.

They were later sent to a hospital for blood tests.

The German police chief said that if other raids were any basis for an estimate, 60 to 80 per cent of the girls were diseased.

Policy Decision On Japs' Future Is Expected Soon

By the United Press

The Far Eastern Commission, 11-nation policy-making body for Japan, this week is expected to adpot a "basic policy" decision for postwar Japan which in effect places its stamp of approval on the occupation program which has been followed by the United States, authoritative sources said yesterday.

They described the FEC program as being simply a slightly revised version of the "United States initial postsurernder policy for Japan" which was proclaimed by President Truman on September 22, 1945.

The commission also will reaffirm the statement made in the initial United States policy pronouncement to the effect that the top Allied official in Japan shall be an individual "designated by the United States," to permit the United States, when it decides to "civilianize" the administration of Japan, to replace General MacArthur with a high commissioner without having to have full agreement of all other nations.

Pepco Refunds by the Scores Given to Children's Hospital

ABOUT THAT REFUND—The 10 cents a month you've already spent for electricity can be turned over to Children's Hospital, where young Roger Vincent of Alexandria is a patient. All you do is fill out the coupon below

Potomac Electric Power Company
929 E Street, N. W.
Washington 4, D. C.

The undersigned customer requests the Potomac Electric Power Company to pay to The Children's Hospital, Washington, D. C., the amount of refunds to which he may be entitled for the period from March 1, 1944, through February 28, 1947, as a result of orders issued by the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia with respect to charges for electric service for that period.

This Authorization Must Be Mailed by Wednesday, June 25, 1947

There was more good news yesterday for Children's Hospital.

The response of District residents to a new plan for aiding the institution's building fund remained enthusiastic. And fresh subscribers by the scores climbed aboard the bandwagon.

The contributors agreed to permit refunds of electric bills paid months ago to be turned over to the hospital's fund, still short of its $1,300,000 goal by some $80,000.

Coupons Pile Up

The Post received 19 new coupon authorizations yesterday and dozens were piling up at Potomac Electric Power Co. offices.

The plan provides that Pepco consumers, entitled to refunds up to $3.60, donate the money to the hospital fund. A coupon of authorization for the donations, which appears in today's Post, may be mailed to the company or to room 200 of The Post.

No Cash Transaction

Under the electric company refund procedure, indorsed by the Washington Board of Trade and the Merchants and Manufacturers Association, no cash exchanges hands. The company merely deducts the money from consumers' July and August bills.

Receipts will be used by the hospital for the construction of a fireproof building to replace the 25-year-old structure on W st. between 12th and 13th sts. nw.

Arab Silence Will Greet U. N. Probers

Jerusalem, Palestine, June 13 (U.P.).—Jamal el Husseini, chairman of the Arab higher committee, today ordered all Arabs in the Holy Land to remain silent on political subjects when talking with members of the United Nations Special Committee on Palestine.

The Arabs also were set to stage a general strike throughout the Holy Land tomorrow when the U. N. committee holds its opening session. Jewish underground groups pledged a truce during the investigation.

The committee will hold its first meeting at 9 a. m. tomorrow and another session in the afternoon. Both will be informal. A Palestine government spokesman will appear at the afternoon session and an unnamed Jewish spokesman will be heard Tuesday.

Then the committee will be taken on tours of Palestine to acquaint them with the country. They will visit holy places in Jerusalem Wednesday morning, attend a reception given by High Commissioner Sir Alan Cunningham in the afternoon, and begin a series of visits outside Jerusalem Thursday.

Husseini instructed the mayors of all Arab villages to receive the delegates with customary Arab hospitality and to spare nothing to make their stay enjoyable.

The Arabs' general strike from dawn to dusk tomorrow will halt all Arab transport, close shops and business establishments and force Arab doctors and government employes to remain home.

Make Your Veto STICK, Mr. President

The majority of the American people expect you to veto the Taft-Hartley Bill.

They do not believe that the man who occupies the presidency by virtue of the Roosevelt election victory in 1944 could sign his name to a bill which would:

Destroy almost every gain labor has made in 50 years.

Drastically weaken workers' bargaining power and open the way for a drive to "bust the unions."

But A Veto Alone Is NOT Enough

If it is not sustained by the Congress it will have served no one—and it will have fooled no one. Yours is the responsibility, Mr. President, to follow through on your veto with a hard-hitting fight to see that your veto is sustained.

Call A Caucus NOW of All Democratic Members of the House and Senate To Organize Now To Sustain Your Veto

Tell the members of your party about the hundreds of thousands of letters and wires you are receiving from all parts of the country, and the mass demonstrations in every city—urging defeat of the Taft-Hartley Bill.

Tell them that the great majority of the American people are workers who will be directly hit (and who will know they've been hit and by whom) by the Taft-Hartley Bill.

Tell the members of your party in Congress, Mr. President, that you intend to veto the Taft-Hartley Bill and that you expect them to sustain your veto.

All-India Party Favors Split Into 2 Nations

New Delhi, June 15 (AP).—The All-India Congress Party agreed today to the division of India into Hindustan and Pakistan but served notice that security will not permit the princely states to declare their independence of the two new dominions.

The Congress is the dominant party in the area which will be Hindustan, the largest and most populous section of India, and its stand thus foreshadowed the policy of the Hindustan government. It was an answer to an announcement by two of the largest princely states, Hyderabad and Travancore, that they intended to proclaim their independence when British power lapses in August.

"We will not recognize any independence of any state in India," said Jawaharlal Nehru, Congress president. "Any recognition of any such independence by any foreign power, wherever it is, will be regarded as an unfriendly act."

The vote on this issue was unanimous, while the tally on the decision to adopt the British partition plan was 153 to 29, with 36 delegates abstaining. Mohandas K. Gandhi, lifelong opponent of any division of India, was among the Congress leaders urging adoption. The proposal—adopted last week by the Moslem League, principal rival of the predominantly Hindu Congress—provides for dominion status this year for the two new nations, and will allow the Indians to decide next year whether they want to sever all ties with the British Empire, which has ruled them for more than 150 years.

More than a dozen princely states already have joined the existing Constituent Assembly, but several of the Punjab Hill states have been reported ready to follow Hyderabad and Travancore in proclaiming independence.

Italian Socialist Says Nation Needs 2 Billion Credit

New York June 15.—Giuseppe Saragat, leader of the anti-Communist Socialist Party of Italian Workers, arrived today at La-Guardia Field from Rome and said that Italy needs 2 billion dollars in credits in the next four years to rehabilitate her economy.

Saragat was accompanied by Matteo Matteotti, 26-year-old son of Giacomo Matteotti, the anti-Fascist leader who was murdered in 1924. They came to the United States to address the convention of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, which opens today in Cleveland, Ohio.

Saragat urged revision of the provisional Italian peace treaty, which he described as "very harsh" on the Italian people.

Senora Peron Gets Big 'Hello' In Spain; London, Paris Cool

London, June 15 (AP).—Officials in European capitals read the dispatches from Madrid today and wondered whether svelte Eva Duarte Peron would consider everything an anti-climax when she arrives in London, Paris and Rome.

Sra. de Peron

Generalissimo Francisco Franco has pulled out all the stops of the Falange organ in welcoming Argentina's first lady. Estimates of the cost of her reception have run between two million and four million dollars.

Britain and France indicated they would regard Mrs. Peron's arrival in London and Paris as unofficial affairs, since the Argentine government had classified her European tour as a personal matter. But there remained the question of just how warm or cool even an unofficial reception should be.

Unwelcome in London

Press attaches in Paris said neither President Vincent Auriol nor Premier Paul Ramadier would receive her. The Socialist Party urged Ramadier to tell the former actress that she didn't belong in Paris.

A similar view was expressed in London today by the Sunday Pictorial, which emblazoned its first page with the headline: "President's Wife Is Not Welcome." It described "increasing embarrassment in British official circles," and said Argentina had been demanding of Britain "'pistol point' prices for meat that often proved to be of appalling quality." The London News of the World said Socialist members of Parliament were angry, and would question the government in Commons this week.

A British Foreign Office spokesman said she would receive all the courtesies "due the wife of the President of a friendly nation."

Due in Rome June 24

In Rome, Foreign Minister Carlo Sforza plans a formal dinner and other functions. "Her visit is very welcome," the Foreign Ministry said.

Mrs. Peron is due in Rome June 24 from Madrid, and will be received by Pope Pius XII June 25.

There was no question that "Evita" had made a hit in Spain. Her appearances with Franco had drawn bigger crowds than Franco alone ever had. She has worn a different outfit at every function, and startled some of the spectators the other day, with the mercury hitting 85, when she wore a dark red silk dress and a full-length mink cape. For a theatrical performance she donned an ankle-length cape of white ostrich feathers.

Reds Seek Control Of Unions, Says British Paper

London, June 15 (U.P.)—The Conservative Sunday Dispatch reported today that the secretariat of the Labor Party was investigating a campaign by the Communists to worm themselves into control of British labor unions.

"Foiled finally and decisively in its attempt to secure affiliation with the Labor Party, the politbureau of the Communist Party—its inner caucus—has directed that trade unions should be permeated.

"This has already reached such formidable proportions that the Trade Nnion Congress is being forced by the Labor Party to act. A 'purge' is demanded. Cabinet Ministers, with the exception of three who are sympathetic to Communists, are very concerned at the way in which they are getting control of key positions in the trade union structure."

$250,000 to Finance Latin America Studies

New York, June 15 (AP).—Carnegie Corp. of New York announced today grants of $250,000 for an experimental five-year program to develop four permanent university study centers in Latin America.

The project will be carried out jointly by the University of North Carolina, the University of Texas, Tulane University and Vanderbilt University.

VFW Warned Communism Is Real Danger

Warning of the danger of communism, Representative Alvin E. O'Konski of the House Veterans Affairs Committee told more than 800 members of the Veterans of Foreign Wars at the Mayflower Hotel last night that "the time is later than most people think."

Speaking at the first of three evening sessions of the VFW's twenty-eighth annual District encampment, the Republican Congressman from Wisconsin warned that "the American people must realize that communism is not a political party, but a way of life directly opposite our way of life."

His talk was the opening round of the local VFW's fight against communism—a fight that will be featured tonight by the introduction of a resolution by the Department's Committee on Americanism demanding that members of the United Public Workers of America, a union of Government employes, be barred from Federal jobs unless the union "rescinds its policy of adherence to the Communist Party line."

Four persons were presented with awards in the fields of Americanism and community service at the session. They were: Mrs. Eleanor Patterson, publisher of the Washington Times-Herald, for her efforts to expose the Communist party and fellow travelers; Col. Waldron E. Leonard, coordinator of Veterans Affairs for the District, for work in the Veterans' Information and Service Center; Mrs. Jessie Williams, chairman, VFW Ladies Auxiliary hospital committee, and Maj. Howard K. Livingston, general manager of the Lanham Race Track Association, for entertainment of hundreds of hospitalized veterans.

The encampment will be resumed at 8 p. m. today. Adelbert W. Lee, member of the District of Columbia's board of education, will discuss the infiltration of Communist influence in the public schools. Nomination of department-

St. Clement's Lays Cornerstone

Members of St. Clement's Episcopal Church yesterday viewed the cornerstone-laying of their new $130,000 contemporary-styled edifice on Seminary rd., Fairlington-Parkfairfax.

After opening services in the present chapel, the congregation, choir and rector, the Rev. Darby Wood Betts, moved to the scene of the cornerstone-laying. The Rev. Betts led the ceremony.

The proposed new church is one of the first contemporary edifices in the Episcopal Church. Through use of modern lighting and air-conditioning, windows are eliminated. "A minimum of mental and physical distractions is assured through this design," says the Rev. Betts.

Ground was broken for the new church last March 21. The present chapel opened its doors on Easter, 1944, and was built at a cost of $19,000 through aid from the Episcopal Diocese of Virginia.

Renomination Sure For Vaden, Bustard

Danville, Va., June 15 (AP).—State Senators R. C. Vaden of Gretna, and Maitland H. Bustard of Danville, were assured renomination as Democratic candidates for the general assembly's upper body from the Thirteenth District as mass meetings today gave Vaden 135 and Bustard 121 instructed votes for the Democratic senatorial district convention at Stewart June 21.

Worst Oil and Gas Shortage In History Threatens U. S.

The United States is facing an oil shortage more serious than any during the war period, it was revealed yesterday by the Oil and Gas Division of the Interior Department.

By late summer or fall, it is predicted, the old wartime signs, "Sorry, no gas today" may become prevalent once more at the Nation's oil stations.

The danger is most imminent on the East Coast, it is said, although for the long pull, the situation in the Midwest is more serious.

Immediate Pinch Likely

Unless Congress acts within the next 16 days, Washington and other Atlantic Coast areas may begin to feel the pinch immediately after July 1.

This will be due to lack of transportation facilities, that will develop unless arrangements are made to continue operation of several hundred tankers now operated by the Maritime Commission.

The law requires the Maritime Commission to get out of tanker operation June 30. The commission is now operating about 260 tankers, which are hauling about a million gallons of gasoline a day from Gulf ports.

Maritime's tankers haul about one fifth of the oil from Gulf ports to the East Coast, and about one third of the Caribbean oil, from the Dutch West Indies, Venezuela, etc.

Resolution Offered

In an emergency move, Senator Wallace H. White, jr. (R., Me.) offered a resolution in the Senate Thursday granting the commission power to continue tanker operation after June 30.

No hearings have been held in the Senate, although the House Merchant Marine Committee, has made exhaustive studies. Action by the committee, however, was halted by the sudden death of its chairman, Fred Bradley (R., Mich.) about two weeks ago.

The chief cause of the present emergency stems from the unexpectedly high consumption since the end of the war.

Russians Send Fleet For U. S. Gas and Oil

San Pedro, Calif., June 15 (U.P.). The first five ships of a 12-tanker Russian fleet have arrived to load Diesel fuel and aviation gasoline for Vladivostok, the Marine Exchange said.

The remainder of the fleet, each vessel of which is capable of carrying 50,000 gallons, is expected to reach harbor before the end of the month.

Oil purchases are being negotiated by the Amtorg Trading Co., the Soviet purchasing agency.

The United States today is consuming more petroleum products than during the war, including the tremendous demands of the armed forces and for lend-lease.

Several Factors

According to Edward B. Swanson, assistant director of the Oil and Gas Division of the Interior Department, consumption during the first quarter this year averaged 5,519,000 barrels a day. The entire 1947 consumption, it is estimated, will average 5,733,000 barrels a day.

The highest wartime consumption, including all war demands, was in June, July and August, 1945. June consumption was 5,576,000 barrels a day; July 5,399,000 and August 5,260,000.

Prewar consumption, in 1940, averaged 4,369,000 barrels a day.

Several factors enter into the situation. They include:

1. The lack of railroad tank cars, similar to the lack of boxcars that is seriously affecting grain transportation.

2. Changeover of wartime pipelines such as the Big Inch and the Little Big Inch from gasoline and oil transportation to natural gas.

3. Changes in sources of supply. Midwest oil fields, Michigan, Illinois, and particularly, Oklahoma and East Texas are no longer producing sufficient crude to keep the mammoth refineries at points such as Whiting, Ind.; Sugar Creek, Md., and Wood River, Ill., working at capacity.

Biggest Midcontinent production is now in west Texas, which is not touched by the pipeline systems of the big Midwest oil refineries. Shortages of tank cars has made other types of transportation exceedingly scarce.

Suspect Is Held In Stabbing Death

Nick Ores, 33, of 655 Made's ct. nw., was being held at Second Precinct Police Station last night for coroner's action following the fatal stabbing yesterday of Rochelle Johnson, about 40.

Police said the stabbing occurred about 5:50 p. m. in front of Ores' home, the culmination of a standing feud between the two men. Johnson, no fixed address, was pronounced dead at the scene by Dr. Robert Lash of Casualty Hospital. He was stabbed in the chest.

20 Escape Death When Army Plane Makes Crash Landing

William C. Murphy, 28, 4634 N. 23d st. Arlington, Va., copilot, and Staff Sergt. C. D. O'Connel, Bolling Field.

Boarded at Godman

(The officer said the plane had only a few passengers aboard when it left here, and that these got off at Langley Field. The passengers injured in the crash, he said, apparently boarded the ship at Godman Field.)

Eyewitnesses said the big transport took off normally, but trouble developed seconds later. The pilot radioed the field he was having trouble and would return for a landing. He did not say what was wrong.

The plane, which had gained only some 300 feet altitude, made a wide, low circle of the field and a perfect approach. At the last minute, only 100 feet short of the runway, the two-engined plane dropped straight down and slid on its belly to the landing strip, witnesses said.

Capt. James F. Duesler, field public relations officer who witnessed the crash, said a tiny fire broke out immediately but that through the efforts of the Army sergeant the passengers were able to tumble out the escape hatch before the plane's gasoline burst into flames.

Gas Tanks Explode

The transport was entirely destroyed by the fire when the gasoline tanks went up almost on the heels of the running passengers.

All 20 of the persons aboard, including the crew of four, were taken to Fort Knox Hospital, but all except one man was released after examination and first aid treatment. The one unnamed man held in the hospital suffered a dislocated hip and was expected to be released tomorrow.

Duesler said all the injuries consisted of first and second degree burns and a few bruises.

The passengers were unanimous in crediting their quick exit from the plane to the Army sergeant who wrested open the escape hatch and led them through it.

The transport left Bolling Field today, stopped at Langley Field, Va., and then landed here for servicing. It was bound for Fort Riley, Kans.

The plane is the Army version of the commercial DC-3.

Iraq Fugitives, Iranians Fighting Full-Scale Battles

Khoi, Iran, June 15 (AP).—The Iranian army was waging full-scale warfare today against 1000 encircled Barzani tribesmen in the mountainous northwest corner of Iran in sight of the Turkish and Russian frontiers.

Tanks and planes went into action in support of 4000 Iranian troops after a battle yesterday in which 30 Iranian soldiers and one officer were killed. Barzani losses were put at more than 100 killed and many wounded.

The Barzanis are the followers of Iraq Chieftain Mullah Mustafa el Barzani. He and approximately 100 Barzani chieftains are under death sentence in Iraq for armed robbery and rebellion. They have been moving northward since their flight from Iraq and Turkey in an apparent attempt to reach the Russian border.

End Is in Sight For Mundt Bill

ment which would place the whole cultural program under guidance of an 11-member advisory council of "outstanding Americans" in the fields of agriculture, journalism, radio, motion pictures, education, labor and business.

May Be Delayed

Final House action on the bill had been scheduled for this week, but there is some doubt now that it will be pushed in view of the reported decision of the Senate leaders.

Ball told a reporter he thinks the Senate would agree to give the service six million dollars, which would cover the five-million-dollar yearly cost of commercial broadcast programs now purchased by the Government. These commercial programs make up about one half of those which have been short-waved.

The additional million dollars, Ball said, would cover administrative costs for a sharply reduced State Department staff.

Vandenberg and Taft are said to believe that the Mundt authorization bill would be almost certain to face a stiff fight in the Senate, a situation Vandenberg particularly wants to avoid now in view of the uncertain reception in Congress for any additional foreign policy proposals at this time.

Bonuses Offered By France to Stop Wave of Strikes

Paris, June 15 (U.P.).—Labor Minister Daniel Mayer tonight announced production bonuses for all workers in an effort to stop a wave of strikes.

The bonuses were interpreted as Premier Paul Ramadier's answer to the labor unions' demand for an over-all raise.

"Uniform bonuses cannot be distributed without danger to the whole French economy," Mayer said in a radio speech.

He said bonuses up to seven francs (about 6 cents) an hour might be permitted in all industries. The government will leave it to employers and employes to decide the amount in each case.

Leaders of the General Confederation of Lbor were not satified but have not formally rejected bonuses as an alternative to pay increases.

"Built in the shape of cars to come"

It struck us as a happy phrase the first time we used it in our advertising.

Certainly, no other eight words quite so neatly express how this trim and tidy Buick underlines the coming thing in automobile styling.

Now come those who say we don't do justice to a great car and a great buy when we stress outward looks alone.

"How about what this car can do?" they want to know. "Maybe style makes folks want a Buick, but it's performance that makes 'em mighty glad they insisted on getting one."

Lift the bonnet for a good look — and you quickly see why.

There's a big straight-eight power plant that fills the hood practically to overflowing.

Put a micrometer on it, and you'll find that in a whole handful of its dimensions it is made to closer tolerances than even an airplane power plant.

It's a valve-in-head engine, which means it's more efficient in basic design—and it makes the most of that with Fireball combustion that squeezes the most good out of each tiny fuel charge.

Finally, it's topped off with Buick's special Accurite cylinder finish, a Buick exclusive that makes this honey ready to ramble the minute you get it — and keeps it young, lively and eager over thousands on thousands of active miles.

Fireball power alone is enough to make this America's most wanted automobile — yet here in Buick are style, and size, and room, and the matchless gentleness of an all-coil springing ride.

For your money — why not get them all? Placing your order now makes certain that you will—and you'll find the same friendly, courteous help in getting a Buick soon-as-possible whether or not you have a car to trade.

Helen Morgan's in It, Too

The Real Al Jolson Will Be Along Soon In One of His Old Hits

By Richard L. Coe

THIS IS THE TIME of year when all sorts of oddities crop up on the entertainment calendar (and typewriter carriages stick!)

Warners, having harkened to the clink of precious metals the name Al Jolson conjures in radio and juke-box circles, to say nothing of rival Columbia's "The Jolson Story," have come up with one of Al's old pictures from their stored treasures.

Al Jolson

This one is "Go Into Your Dance," which will hit the Earle screen after the incoming "Dear Ruth" gets through with it. It was released in March of '35, though, to be sure, the shiny new print the Earle promises won't look 12 years old.

Along with Al, the players include Ruby Keeler (who was then Mrs. Jolson), Glenda Farrell, Patsy Kelly and Helen Morgan. Between them they'll be singing "About a Quarter to Nine," "A Latin From Manhattan," "The Little Things You Used to Do," "Casino de Paree," "Mammy, I'll Sing About You," and, inevitably, the title song.

If you think about it at all—and days like this you have to brood about something abstruse—it is a curious phenomenon. A few weeks from now a pack of young Washingtonians will be standing in line to see a picture filmed when they were little more than babies. The style-conscious will be yok-yoking about clothes that are faded memories in mother's half-forgotten scrap-book. They'll be watching players who are simply names to them, overheard, perhaps, in their parents' reminiscent patter.

When Is Jolson Jolson?

And the man they'll want to see will be a 59-year-old song-shouter who's been counted out as many times as he's been down. It's not his picture that's attracted them, simply a voice. But it's a voice that's struck some intangible human chord, bouyant and high-sprirted. Just as Al was the first to sing in the talkies, he's also the first entertainer to enjoy a fresh vogue through the marvels of science.

A curious triumph it is and one wonders whether, had their prime come to meet electrical transcription with the exact timeliness of Jolson whether Eddie Leonard, Nora Bayes and the past's popular singers would have clicked as solidly.

Wraner's Cody Pfanstiehl brings up another point. When, asks Cody, is Jolson NOT Jolson in the eyes of the new generation? When Jolson is played by Parks or when Jolson plays Jolson? Will the real article live up to the impression Parks puts across when he acted Jolson to Jolson's singing voice?

One thing will be easy, though, for the town's drama reporters whose telephones play so important a part in their lives. When anyone calls to ask "Is it really Al Jolson who's playing in 'Go Into Your Dance'?", the answer will be a straight "Yes." No quibbling.

ANOTHER BOOKING ODDITY is the Capitol's "Asylum of Horrors," which will take over for one performance only, a midnight show on Tuesday the 24th. Loew's promises a Frankenstein monster in the flesh, if flesh it is. In fact, Loew's continue: "Young ladies are advised to come only with the most courageous and strong escorts lest they find themselves with a fainting young man on their hands," as novel a piece of advice as has come along in quite a spell. The screen feature that night week will be "Face of Marble," with John Carradine, the same who opens tomorrow at Olney in "A Bill of Divorcement."

ULINE'S ARENA is in the novelty swim, too. This will be a "Hillbilly Roundup" on Friday and Saturday nights of this week. The star will be Eddie Arnold, "The Tennessee Plowboy," a master at "Heartrending renditions of the corniest in ballads." Eddie's numbers will include "Cattle Call," "When It's Round-up Time in Heaven" and "That's How Much I Love You," for which he's gotten a name on records. Others on the bill will include Sleepy McDaniel, Tommy Sommers, orchestra, Tex Cherry, Kirby Perry, Uncle Dick and his Dixie Skyliners and the Carolina Ramblers. WARL's Connie Gay, who's been pushing Arnold on his programs, will M. C. Master of Corn, says Connie.

SHE'S ONLY A STARLET, says Universal Pictures of Patricia Alphin, but then, brightening a bit, boasts that she's on her way up from being the lot's "mail girl." She's coming along soon with Deanna Durbin and Donald O'Connor in "Something in the Wind," which seems to be what she's sighted here

Author Did Better Than His Character

New York.—Jack Kirkland author of "Tobacco Road," who was divorced last month, retained the ownership of his Pennsylvania farm under the terms of the settlement. Kirkland has kept this farm for many years. "Tobacco Road' made me love the soil," he explains, "but what is more important, it gave me the capacity to afford it." . . . The new Fashion Fair at Madison Square Garden will feature hip make-up for ladies, and a bathing suit which opens up into a beachmat.

Sir Cedric Hardwicke

Sir Cedric Hardwicke was asked why he isn't seen at many parties. "Because whenever I go to parties," said Hardwicke, "the other dull man corners me and I find myself spending the entire evening with him." When Robert E. Sherwood was told this story, he sighed: "I'm the other dull man." . . . Leo Lindy, the restaurateur, is preparing lawsuits against the restaurateurs throughout the country who have stolen his name. Lindy is particularly disturbed at a Chicago hotel which offered "Lindy's Chopped Liver." Mr. Lindy sampled the liver, grimaced, and sent the restaurateur his own recipe. "I hope this will improve the quality of your chopped liver, and protect my reputation," he wrote, "until the outcome of my case against you."

Tony Galento, who has become a wrestler, saves all his money. Unlike most of the prize fighters who've had a chance at the big money, Galento has spent little of it and invested the rest astutely . . . There was only one period during which he was tempted to splurge. This was after his fight with Joe Louis, when he was knocked out after he had succeeded in flooring the champion. When Galento was given the check for his share he said: "I'm gonna live like a king. I'm moving into the best apartment—the finest—90 bucks a month."

Sol Hurok, the impresario, recently went to St. Louis inspecting his touring companies. He tells of meeting a St. Louis businessman who reported that business was bad, and who said: "I close down two days a week—Tuesdays and Thursdays—and thereby save $100 a week. And with this $100 a week I make a living."

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

Marshall Cons Policy While in Barber Chair

By Drew Pearson

SECRETARY of State Marshall and his top aides have just concluded some significant secret meetings with representatives of private organizations in a position to mold public opinion. Purpose of the hush-hush three-day session was to sell the "Truman doctrine" and defend the White House against Henry Wallace's criticism.

Most of the State Department's top officials were bitterly anti-Truman—with the exception of General Marshall and U. N. delegate Warren Austin. The others, including Undersecretary Dean Acheson and Near East Director Loy Henderson, pleaded behind-closed doors for a real "get-tough policy." Those to whom they talked included the Daughters of the American Revolution, Baptist Public Affairs Committee, National Conference of Christians and Jews, and the League of Women Voters.

Secretary Marshall teed off the meeting with a friendly talk in which he whimsically told of his own difficulties in studying foreign affairs.

"Every time I think I've really learned the story," Marshall said, "something entirely new develops and I feel lost again. Why, there's so much to learn and so little time to learn it in that Dean Acheson had to brief me on what had happened today while I was sitting in the barber's chair getting my hair cut. Now the barber knows as much as any of us about what's going on."

Acheson wasted little time on niceties. The retiring Undersecretary declared flatly that America's enemy is "communism with a capital C." The United States, he said, is not worried about communism as an ideology, but only about communism as used by Russia for expansionism. Russia, he charged, is deliberately delaying peace. It is a police state and therefore requires continued expansion in order to maintain its power.

'A Seamless Garment'

ACHESON DENIED that American foreign policy is a disjointed hodgepodge, describing it instead as "a seamless garment" all flowing in the same direction.

The Undersecretary then gave a broad hint that the State Department may soon compromise the Jewish position on Palestine. Issues like Palestine, he said, could not be discussed solely on their own merits or on the basis of right and wrong. Palestine had to be considered as part of an over-all policy with over-all objectives. Several listeners interpreted this to mean that the final decision on Palestine would be based on American policy toward Russia—in other words, a policy of not antagonizing the Arabs.

Loy Henderson, director of Near Eastern Affairs, took strong exception to Henry Wallace's and Bartley Crum's attacks on the State Department's policy in Greece, Turkey and Palestine. He even accused Crum of lying about the State Department in his book, "Behind the Silken Curtain." In his book, Crum printed verbatim conversations with Henderson. However, Henderson declares:

I have never talked to Crum personally or privately about Palestine."

Henderson also charged that Crum had violated security regulations by making public certain secret State Department documents. "At an appropriate time," Henderson said, the State Department will make public all the documents on Palestine.

Henderson also denied that any differences had ever existed between the White House and the State Department on Palestine, and explained that cables dispatched by Roosevelt and Cordell Hull to Arab leaders were merely designed to assure Arab chieftains that no change would take place in American policy toward Palestine without consulting Arabs and Jews.

"It was necessary to send repeated assurances to the Arabs every time some high official made what appeared to be a policy statement on Palestine," Henderson explained.

Negroes and Communism

AT ONE POINT representatives of several Negro organizations asked Henderson what the United States was doing for the world's colored races, most of whom, they said, were imperialistically exploited.

"Isn't it true," asked a representative of the National Council of Negro Women, "that Russia is friendlier to the darker races than the United States?"

This angered Henderson.

"The Russians never did anything constructive in any nation or for any people," he replied. "All they do is tear down and destroy. You've no idea what evil people they are."

He denied that oil entered into the Near Eastern diplomatic picture, and maintained that though loss of oil rights would be disadvantageous to the United States, it would not be decisive. Henderson said he didn't think the Russian Near Eastern objective was oil either, since Russia has enormous untapped oil resources around the Caspian Sea, with no great reason for reaching into other countries for petroleum.

Explains Soviet Votes

U. N. DELEGATE Warren Austin seemed slightly nervous while talking to the "opinion mobilizers" and pleaded with them to keep his remarks secret. He said that Soviet tactics at the United Nations were not as inconsistent as appeared on the surface and that many of the more violent speeches by Gromyko and his aides were purely propagandistic with little relationship to Russia's real position.

When it comes to actual voting, Austin maintained, Russia is much closer to the other nations than she is on speechmaking. The public doesn't realize, he said, how many times the Russians have agreed with the United States.

The former Senator from Vermont expressed the belief that Russia wants the United Nations to succeed, but was keeping one foot in the door for an escape in case it became clear that the U. N. no longer provides Russia with protection.

Austin urged greater public understanding of Russian-American problems. Best proof of hope for United States-Russian relations, he said, is the fact that Russia used the veto 10 times last year, but only once this year.

Note: Best crack of the conference came from Secretary Marshall. "We not only have to get the facts about the truth," he said, "but the truth about the facts."

Worsham Overhauls Snead to Bag Open Title

Masterson Sparkles as Nats Down Tigers Twice, 1-0, 5-1

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

EIGHT MONTHS AGO the favorite guy in Boston was Rudy York. He was the only man on the Red Sox who was hitting a lick against the Cardinals in the World Series, and his home runs swung two games to Boston. The same St. Louis pitchers who were pitching with contempt to Ted Williams were prudently giving walks to the big Indian with the big bat, later in the series.

POVICH

Disenchantment set in, however, and York was traded over the weekend to the White Sox in an even swap for Murrell Jones, a rookie first baseman with the unexciting batting average of .236. York's own batting average was a mere .212 and his home runs this year were so infrequent that Manager Joe Cronin viewed him as a liability.

Cronin may have been too hasty in trading York away. The big fellow is a notoriously slow starter. In a year when he hit 33 home runs, he hit 18 of 'em in September. In parting with York, Cronin gave up on a fellow who last year drove in 119 runs, only four fewer than Ted Williams, who is supposed to be the big wheel of the Red Sox.

YORK IS NO TEETOTALER, and his excursions off the reservation have been frequent, but the big fellow's consistency has been remarkable nevertheless. In his last eight seasons of play he has missed only six games. If he had a weakness on bunts and slow rollers, it was offset in a great degree by his skill around the bag, where he was the best pick-up man in the league on low, bad throws.

Cronin, however, never did see anything sacred in pennant-winning teams or the adage that it's folly to trade men off a pennant winner. After winning the flag with Washington in 1933, he traded off three of his regulars—Goose Goslin, Earl Whitehill and Luke Sewell—before the '34 season started. It wasn't smart, however. The Nats finished seventh that year.

CERTAINLY THE WORTHIEST, if not the best, football game of the 1947 season will be played in New York at the Polo Grounds on September 3. It's the Herald Tribune's game for the benefit of the Fresh Air Fund, for underprivileged kids, between the New York Giants and a collection of Eastern all-stars, culled from the big names of Eastern college football of last season.

These games became a sure-fire sell-out from the day it was announced that the touchdown twins of West Point—Doc Blanchard and Glenn Davis—would make their farewell appearance in the same backfield as members of the all-stars. But the Herald Tribune has not been content to rest on that attraction.

Over the weekend, it was announced that Eddie Allen, Penn fullback, and Bernie Gallagher, Penn tackle, will be with the all-stars. They merited selection on their play last season, but if they couldn't play a lick of football, they would still qualify for some nice press agentry.

FULLBACK ALLEN was already in the Air Corps when the Japs bombed Pearl Harbor. He was instructor with the parachute troops, and no wonder. At 18, when he matriculated at Penn, he was already a veteran of 83 parachute jumps. That's because he was a member of the celebrated family of flying Allens, which had been riding the balloons and trapeses for several generations, stunting for circuses and carnivals.

Gallagher's story is even more amazing. He went from Penn into the Army in 1943 after the football season closed, and was not only severely wounded on Okinawa, but twice was reported killed in action. His family received two letters announcing his death before they learned of his survival. Army doctors told him his leg wound would prevent his return to football. That was in '43. Last fall he was voted Penn's outstanding player and was drafted by the Los Angeles Dons.

THE PRESSURE OF United States Open play was never better illustrated than by the events at St. Louis this weekend. The pros have long contended that the 72-hole Open is the hardest grind for the individual in any sport, pointing out "Any one of 285 strokes you take can be bad enough to cost you the title."

Bobby Locke lost the Open crown because of his putting, of all things. Going into the tournament he was rated the superior putter of the field, but when his putting could get him home in front it was shaky. Lew Worsham, needing merely to get down in two from the edge of the final green, three-putted and ended up in a tie with Sammy Snead.

It's significant that Locke announced after the tournament that he would pass up the British Open late this month to play in the PGA at Detroit next week, without the United States Open title he hoped to win. Locke is not the drawing card he might have been in England, but if he can win the PGA he'll recoup enough prestige to cash in heavily on his return to British soil.

Newhouser Bested In Opener, Haefner Hurls 2d-Game Win

By Al Costello
Post Reporter

With Walter Masterson continuing his sensational brand of hurling, by whitewashing the league-leading Detroit Tigers and Hal Newhouser in the opener, 1-0, Mickey Haefner made it a perfect day for the Nats and 25,829 Sunday fans in the nightcap with a seven-hit job that enabled the home boys to sweep the bill with a 5-1 triumph.

Detroit's double loss, coupled with New York's triumph over the Browns, dislodged the Tigers from the lead in favor of the Yanks. The Tigers this morning are now coowners of second place, sharing the spot with the Red Sox.

In coming through with his second straight superperformance, following his 16-scoreless-inning masterpiece last week against the Chisox, Masterson's brilliant streak of scoreless innings now has reached 25 and is still rolling.

To top the great Newhouser, who previously had been beaten only once in 17 games by the Nats, Masterson had to be at his very best. He had to quell a ninth-inning storm by the Tigers that saw enemy runners on first and third with none out.

But he was equal to each and every occasion. True, he dished out eight hits, only three of which were solid knocks. But he walked nobody and fanned five, whereas, Newhouser while fanning five walked as many.

Newhouser's Error Costly

Masterson had no soft touch. The Nats could get only six hits off Newhouser and in the end it was Hal's own shoddy fielding and a disastrous wild pitch that paved the way for his downfall. Otherwise, the way both were pitching it could have gone on indefinitely.

That big run the Nats tallied to whip their old pest in the sixth wasn't much to brag about but it was greatly welcomed and took on mountainous proportions as the game progressed.

Matter of fact, the only time the ball was out of the infield when that important tally was scored, was when Newhouser threw it wildly into right field. It happened like this:

Yost, first up, beat out a topped drive down the line for a base hit and sped to second when Newhouser threw wild into right field. Buddy Lewis, up to sacrifice, fouled off two pitchhes and then crossed the Tigers by dumping a bunt down the third-base stripe, beating it out for a hit. Yost moved to third on the tap.

Vernon forced Lewis at second with a tap to Newhouser, who missed a double play only because he had to pause to see that Yost didn't break for the plate.

Wild Pitch

Spence came up, and Newhouser, bearing down too hard, uncorked his wild pitch, too short for Yost to score but on which Vernon went to second. With a base open, the Tigers gambled on Newhouser getting the southpaw-swinging Spence rather than to walk him for righthander Tom McBride and set the stage for a double play.

Spence smacked a grounder to Mayo at second on which Yost, in stride at the swing of the bat, headed for home. Mayo's hurried throw was a little low to Wagner and Yost slid under for the run that was to mean the ball game.

Masterson, as he was last Sunday against the White Sox, was terrific, plus a lot more superlatives.

He gave up eight hits, two of which were bunts and two more slow infield dribblers. George Kell's second hit was a high pop too far out for Christman and not deep enough for McBride. Newhouser's single was a blooper to left. The only solid smacks off the lanky Masterson were Kell's first hit, a line drive single to left, and Eddie Mayo's perfectly placed left field line double starting the ninth.

It was in the ninth that Masterson really showed plenty of the four-letter word that means intestinal fortitude to emerger with his hard won decision.

Mayo's double down the left field line put him in a bad hole. It was worse when Evers dropped a perfect bunt between Yost and Masterson for a hit, sending Jimmy Outlaw, who was running for Mayo, to third.

But Masterson was more than equal to the test. Masterson made Pinchhitter Roger Cramer bounce

Lew Worsham marks his ball while United States Golf Association officials measure the distances of each ball from the cup on the eighteenth green at St. Louis. Snead missed his short putt, Worsham who called for the measurement, rammed his home to win

Lew Talking:

'I Won Open, Imagine That?'

"I GUESS I am sort of excited," Lew Worsham told The Post yesterday by phone from his St. Louis hotel shortly after he had won the National Open championship.

"It's sort of hard for me to realize I won the thing, but I guess I did. I was plenty lucky. I'm not much of a betting man, but if I were I would have had to bet against myself after taking that six on the fifteenth. I was two down to Sam with only three holes to play.

"I got a little lift on the sixteenth with a birdie against Sam's par and on the seventeenth Sam kept me alive when he took a bogie against my par to even the match.

"And when Sam missed that short one on 18, well, I knew I was home. I wasn't nervous . . . I knew I could knock that little putt in and I did. Then, all of a sudden, I got excited as hell. I suddenly realized that I had won the National Open. Can you imagine that?"

WHEN a reporter asked the jubilant Worsham what he had sent his father for Father's Day, the new Open king replied:

"I just won the Open for him. Incidentally, I won the Mid Atlantic PGA on his birthday in April."

Lew said he was glad his 40-foot chip shot on the eighteenth hit the cup.

"It may have stuck had it hit the center of the cup and not the side," he explained, "but I'm glad it hit and kicked off as it did because it was going too fast."

He and his pretty wife, the former Virginia Shoemaker, of Washington, leave early today for Detroit and the PGA championship.

The Worshams plan to return to Washington next Sunday night.

"I don't plan any kind of celebration," he said, "I'll just sit around home and play with Linda (7-year-old daughter), and Rickey (8-month-old son).

Race Driver Killed In Crash at Dayton

Dayton, Ohio, June 15 (AP).—Elbert Booker, 45-year-old driver from Detroit, was killed today in the first event of the big car races at the Dayton Speedway. His car hit the wall on the straightaway on the far side of the track while attempting to pass George Metzler, Indianapolis.

From the 'Gang'

Lew Will Get Big Welcome

WHEN National Open Champion Lew Worsham comes home to Washington next Sunday he'll walk into a reception befitting a champion.

Mel Shorey, Indian Spring pro who is president of the Mid-Atlantic PGA, last night said he was already working on plans to give Worsham a "real welcome home party."

"At this early stage," he said, "I don't know the exact nature of our plans, but we're planning a big show. Lew deserves it. We're going to have the gang—all the fellows Lew knows around here—for the thing. We'll meet him at the station and then the party starts.

"All of us are so proud of Lew. I know all his friends are a bit weary today from pulling for him so hard yesterday. It was a great victory for a great guy and we're going to have a real affair to show him what we think of him and his victory."

Pros Move on To PGA Play

Detroit, June 15 (AP).—Hustling from one major championship to another with only two days intervening to sharpen up their game, the Nation's foremost professional golfers paraded into Detroit today for their final tuneup rounds in preparation for the gruelling seven-day national PGA championship starting Wednesday at Plum Hollow Golf Club.

Almost without exception, the top stars hastened here directly from the National Open at St. Louis, where today Washington, D. C.'s 29-year-old Worsham, who only this month was assigned as pro at Oakmont Country Club in Pittsburgh, defeated slamming Sammy Snead in a playoff for the title.

While Worsham's newly won stroke-play supremacy strengthened his rating among the favorites here, the former Navy physical instructor who has been a pro since he was 18 years old had little or no more backing than a half dozen other sturdy candidates for the PGA diadem methodical Ben Hogan won at Portland, Oreg., a year ago.

Although the PGA field never is anything other than "wide open" Hogan, off his match play experience, must be called the man to beat. As defending champion, he is the only automatic qualifier

Lew Wins by A Stroke as Sam Misses 31-Inch Putt

By Gayle Talbot
Associated Press Sports Writer

St. Louis Country Club, June 15.—Lew Worsham, a 29-year-old former sailor from Washington, won the National Open golf championship today when Sammy Snead, his opponent in a thrilling playoff, missed a putt of 2 feet 6½ inches on the eighteenth hole.

The distance was known to a nicety, for it had been necessary to measure and see whether Sammy or Worsham putted first. Sam, his nerves twanging like fiddle strings, stroked his ball, and it circled around the right rim of the cup. Worsham then stepped up and knocked his in—from precisely 2 feet 5½ inches.

A crowd of 5000 packed densely around the final green at the St. Louis Country Club stood in stunned silence during the short interval between Sammy's miss and Lew's winning putt, and then it burst into as throat-rending a tribute as ever welcomed a new champion.

A Heartbreaker for Snead

Worsham, his name virtually unknown when the classic began last Thursday, had climaxed his four rounds of 70, 70, 71, 71 in the championship proper with a dazzling 69 in his victorious play-off against one of the game's greatest figures.

For Snead it was the second galling conclusion to an Open championship which he appeared to have won. It is part of golfing history that the slender, personable figure from the Virginia mountains took eight memorable strokes on the seventy-second hole to lose the 1939 title event at Philadelphia.

It didn't seem possible that the golfing gods could do it to Sammy again—but they did. He led Worsham all the way today. He was two strokes ahead after only five holes. He still was one blow in front after nine holes, and when they had putted out on the fifteenth green—three holes from home—he was two big shots ahead. Worsham hurled his ball disgustedly down on the grass, as though virtually conceding defeat.

Lew Comes Back

But there was hidden fight left in the young man who served three years in Uncle Sam's Navy. On the sixteenth hole, a short one, he hauled off and sank a putt of 28 feet to cut Sam's lead to one stroke. On the seventeenth, Snead faltered for only the second time in the tense duel, taking an over-par five after his second shot from the rough missed the green.

And there it was—all square—as they teed off on the deciding hole, with the crowd stretching completely down both sides of the 419-yard fairway and ringing the distant green by the clubhouse.

Both hit tremendous drives, right down the middle. Snead, perhaps, 2 yards short of his rival, cracked a great iron over a yawning bunker in front of the carpet, and it stopped 15 feet to the left of the cup. Worsham over-hit somewhat, his ball skipping past the cup and stopping some 40 feet beyond on the apron.

It looked like Sammy had it in the bag, but after the crowd had quieted, Worsham hauled out an iron and chipped up a beauty. It rolled truly and squarely into the cup—then bounced out. That left Snead with his 15-footer for a win.

Snead Putts Poorly

"You know, I thought I was going to sink it," Sam said after saddened moments later. "But it

McQuinn's Homers Win Both Games as Yanks Take Lead

New York, June 15 (AP).—With veteran George McQuinn starring at bat in both games, the New York Yankees swept a double-header from the St. Louis Browns, 10-4 and 2-1, to go into first place in the American League today.

The twin victory put the Yanks a game ahead of the Boston Red Sox and Detroit Tigers who were tied for second place.

McQuinn, who homered with two on in the opener, also hammered a four bagger in the seventh inning of the nightcap to produce the tie-breaking run.

Behind a 16-hit attack that included three-run homers by McQuinn and Bill Johnson, Spud Chandler breezed to his sixth victory of the year in the opener.

Jeff Heath homered for the Browns in the fourth.

Jones Goes Wild, Gets Two Homers In Bosox Sweep

Boston, June 15 (AP).—Only 24 hours after becoming a Boston Red Socker, Murrell Jones homered in each game as the American League champions gained ground by sweeping a double-header from his recent Chicago White Sox teammates by 7-3 and 8-4 margins today before a packed 34,024 crowd.

The new Boston first baseman, traded for Rudy York yesterday, used his second circuit blow of the day, his fifth of the season, to clean loaded sacks with two out in the ninth to break a 4-4 nightcap tie.

Before he belted an Orval Grove pitch into the left field screen, that righthander had packed the bases by purposely passing Ted Williams and Bobby Doerr after Johnny Pesky had collected his third single.

Braves Knock Off Pirates Twice to Capture National League Lead

Boston Wins Twin Bill 13-4 and 12-3

Pittsburgh, June 15 (AP).—The Boston Braves used the hapless Pittsburgh Pirates as a springboard into first place today as they flattened the cellar-dwelling Pirates, 13 to 4, in the opener and 12 to 3, in the nightcap of their Sunday double-header.

The double win moved the Braves from third to the top spot in the National League as Chicago slipped from the No. 1 position.

Southpaw Warren Spahn became the first 10-game winner in the majors this season in notching a victory in the first game. Johnny Sain picketed the second Brave triumph.

The Pirate pitching was another and less pleasant matter. The games marked the seventeenth and eighteenth straight contests in which Pirate starters failed to go the distance. Three Pittsburgh flingers saw action in the first contest and five in the second.

Bob Kiner got his eleventh and twelfth home runs of the season in the first game and Cox honored twice in the nightcap, getting six hits in seven trips to the plate.

Rampaging Cards Clip Dodgers, 11-3

St. Louis, June 15 (AP).—The St. Louis Cardinals ganged up on the Brooklyn Dodgers with 17 hits to take the fourth straight game from the visitors, 11 to 3, behind the seven-hit pitching of Howie Pollet.

The Dodgers piled up three runs in their half of the eighth but the Redbirds had built up a substantial lead which proved to be safe.

THE RUN THAT DID IT—Eddie Yost of the Nats slides under Catcher Hal Wagner, of the Tigers, in the sixth inning to bring the Nats a 1-0 decision in the opener. The boy in blue is Umpire Hal Weafer to Christman, whose peg to Rick Ferrell headed off Outlaw, who was out after a brief rundown. Meanwhile, Evers went to second and Cramer, of course, to first.

Then came the Tigers' two heaviest hitters, Pat Mullins and George Kell, both well over .300.

Working carefully he flicked a couple of strikes past Mullins and finally made him bite on a tantalizing slow curve which the Tiger slugger missed by a foot.

Came Kell and .330-something average and already with two hits. He fouled four pitches and again Masterson resorted to that slow jug-handle on which Kell, fooled completely, barely managed to lay his bat to lift a soft bloop to Christman to nail down the well-merited triumph.

It was Walter's fifth victory against three losses, equalling his maximum wins for a single season in six years with the Nats.

The Nats picked up where they didn't leave off in the second game against one of their favorite "cousins," Frank (Stubby) Overmire, getting two runs in the first.

Yost beat out his third infield hit of the day and Lewis popped a single that dropped just out of Lake's reach in short left. Vernon sacrificed and the Tigers again disdaining to purposely walk Spence with an open base, paid for their lack of imagination when Stan slapped a single through the box to score Yost and Lewis.

The Nats picked up two more in the third when Lewis was hit by a pitch, rolled to third on Spence's double down the right field line, and both scampered across the dish when McBride whaled a two-bagger to deep left.

The Tigers' run in the third off Haefner was a gift of Buddy Lewis. With Skeeter Webb on first and two away, Outlaw lined a drive to right which Buddy first misjudged and finally dropped for a two-base error on which Webb scored from first.

The Nats' final run in the sixth resulted from a walk to Priddy, Christman's sacrifice and Evans' single to right.

Meanwhile, Haefner sailed along serenely and was very stingy with hits, giving only five after the second inning and never more than one per frame during that stretch.

His troubles were consequently very few and very mild.

Eddie Yost's two for two plus two walks in the opener against Newhouser gave that young man his first perfect day in the big leagues . . . When Newhouser threw wild trying to get Yost on his swinging bunt in the sixth, which eventually turned out to be the only run of the game, "Prince Hal" threw his glove almost to second base in disgust.

Giants Stay In 2d, Split With Redlegs

Cincinnati, June 15 (AP).—New York clung to second place in the National League race—just 6 percentage points behind Boston, the new pacesetter—here today by drubbing the Cincinnati Reds, 9 to 1 in the second game of a double-header, before 34,192 fans, after Cincinnati won a 4-to-3 decision in the opener.

Johnny Mize hit his seventeenth home run of the season for the New Yorkers in the eighth inning of the nightcap.

Grady Hatton, Cincinnati third baseman, hit his fourth home run of the season and his second in two days in the eighth inning.

Phils Drop Cubs to Third

Chicago, June 15 (AP).—The Philadelphia Phillies won the first game of the season from the Chicago Cubs today, defeating the league leaders 6 to 1. Schoolboy Rowe snapped a five-game Cubs winning streak for his eighth victory.

The loss knocked the Cubs out of the league lead and into third as the Boston Braves took over after beating the Pirates twice.

Worsham Sinks His Putt, Sam Misses on 18th Hole was cross-grain, and there must have been a roll I didn't see."

He hit a poor putt. It curled off and was short. He stepped up impatiently to knock it in, and then Worsham, not lacking in presence of mind, halted him abruptly with a demand that the distances of the two balls from the hole be measured. The gesture possibly decided the championship.

Sam grumbled, then stood aside hot and impatient while Isaac Granger, the referee, and his assistant put a tape measure to the two pellets. By the time it was decided that Snead, indeed, was due to putt first, Sammy probably was past his putting prime. His final losing stab at the sphere was sad.

There was never a doubt in anybody's mind that Worsham would put his ball in the hole. In the stillness it clanged as it struck the back of the cup. In an instant he was surrounded, and his back took a beating. Snead, the stricken, wandered to the edge of the green with unseeing eyes.

"I would rather have blown it yesterday than this way," he said.

It was a painful ending to a brilliant match. Both men were very much on their game, and their putting was little short of phenomenal. Snead shot seven threes on the first 12 holes, and yet was all-square at that point. Prior to his blow-up at the end, only a bad six on the sixth hole had marred the dazzling quality of Sam's golf.

On the first hole, Snead sank a 10-footer to start the ball rolling with a birdie. On the third he holed from 12 feet. On the eighth he chipped in from 30 feet, on the tenth from 25 feet. Worsham, setting his sizzling pace on the back nine, squarred the match by sinking an 18-footer on the twelfth, and then, as previously told, holed from 28 feet on the sixteenth.

Best Ball of 63

Between the two of them, they scored a best ball of 63—eight strokes under par. And yet, at the end, Snead missed the shortest putt that ever decided a major title in this country. The shortest one previously, they say, was a 42-incher that Byron Nelson missed on the thirty-eighth hole of the PGA championship at Denver in 1941. Vic Ghezzi holed his from the same distance to win it.

Worsham's victory put $2500 immediately into his pocket—the $2000 first prize and $500 contributed by the U. S. Golf Association. Snead won $2000. The victory will within the next year mean considerably more money to the former Washington, D. C., caddie and he adds a bright new name to the gallery of golfing stars.

District Runners Win

Johnny Leiss, Jimmy Carrick and Jimmy Montague, all of the Washington Track and Field Club, finished one, two, three in a nine-mile run held at Clifton Park, Baltimore, yesterday. The winning time was 51 minutes flat.

Washington Aviation

Miss Patsy Miles defeated medalist Mrs. L. T. Best, 5 and 4, in the second round of the Mrs. R. C. Doyle Trophy competition at Washington Aviation.

In other matches Mrs. Ed Fitch defeated Mrs. R. Fletcher, 6 and 5; Mrs. C. W. Minor downed Mrs. O. M. Wright, 3 and 2; and Mrs. L. E. Yoder beat Mrs. E. P. Miles 1 up.

In the first round of the men's Scotch foursome event, H. H. Luston and Ivan Paul defeated R. C. Doyle and L. E. Yoder, 3 and 2; C. W. Minor and William Wooten beat Tom Manning and C. R. Burner, 6 and 5; Phil Donaldson and Don Scott edged R. Fletcher and Ed Fitch, 1 up, and Ted Tarrant and Nat Smith defeated G. C. Rittenhouse and E. P. Miles, 1 up.

Pirates Buy Wolff From Tribe

Pittsburgh, Pa., June 15 (AP).—The Pittsburgh Pirates today announced purchase of Roger Wolff, 34-year-old Cleveland knuckleball pitcher waived out of the American League.

Landon Pair Wins Net Doubles

The Landon doubles team of Gardner and Lewis defeated Cabell and Horsely of St. Christopher's of Richmond, 3—6, 6—3, 1—6, 7—5, 7—5, to win the Interscholastic Invitation Doubles title yesterday at the Columbia Country Club.

The singles final between Gil Bogley and Jerry Thomas will be held next Sunday at Columbia.

Archie Moore Favored to Whip Sheppard Tonight

Lightheavy Seeks Shot At Title

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

Archie Moore Brings his campaign to get a crack at Gus Lesnevich's light-heavyweight title to Griffith Stadium tonight, where he is favored to carve out a victory over Curtis (Hatchetman) Sheppard, the savage puncher from Baltimore.

Moore will experience a 15-pound weight disadvantage against the 195-pound Sheppard, but his superior ringmanship and a previous verdict over Sheppard have made him an 8-5 favorite.

This rematch billed for 10 heats, rightfully belongs in Baltimore where the first engagement between the two colored boys attracted a $23,000 gate, but the glib-tongued Goldie Ahearn and his Liberty A. C. cronies muscled in on the Baltimore boxing fraternity and hustled the production to Washington.

Sheppard doesn't cut a wide swath in the heavyweight picture today. He can do only one thing—hit like a sledge hammer. Jimmy Bivins did a fancy job on him in Baltimore several weeks ago and removed the Hatchetman from top ranking consideration.

Moore Older of Two

Moore, who at 30 is three years older than Sheppard, is a clever boxer and quite adept at throwing k. o. punches himself. He's stopped some of the better boys in the 175-pound class and waged two great, although losing, battles against Ezzard Charles, the red-hot Cincinnati stylist.

Moore's time as a topnotcher is fast drawing to a close. Before dusk sets in, however, he wants to realize a life-long ambition—a shot at a world's boxing title. He's hot after Lesnevich and is willing to sacrifice a payday for the chance.

A loss to Sheppard will remove any chances Moore has of getting a crack at the crown while a clear triumph won't do his chances any harm.

Sheppard's Record

Sheppard has fought most of the feeble heavyweight crop doing business today. On his record are triumphs over Lee Q. Murray, Joey Maxim (one round kayo), Gus Dorazio and Johnny Shkor, conquerer of Tami Mauriello. On the debit side—he's taken it on the chin from Bivins (three times), Joey Walcott (twice), Lem Franklin, Maxim (twice) and Tony Musto.

Both boys can powder the ball and it should be an interesting tussle to watch. From here, Moore looks like a fairly easy winner.

The supporting show offers a six-rounder bringing together Al Edwards, heavyweight, against Leo Matriccini, while Stonewall Jackson and Johnny Johrinikin, lightweights, are routed the same distance. Joe Green, heavyweight stablemate of Sheppard, opposes Billy Doerner, local marine, in a five rounder, while a four will be announced. Show time is 8:45 p. m.

Bill Bennings:

Dear Folks:

The stewards are on the alert these days. They didn't like the ride put up by Apprentice Pat O'Brien aboard English Jack last Friday and set the boy down for 10 days. Apprentice Jimmy Baird calls Friday, the 13th, his lucky day. He rode four winners on that card and tops the jocks here with 13 winners. Tony Pasta broke down in his last race and Trainer John Bringhurst shipped him back to the farm. Sea Pilot is out of the mare Beaten Biscuit. She is a full sister to Seabiscuit and never raced. Doc Blanche, author of the book "Off to the Races," was a visitor for the Saturday program. Tropical Sun, who finished second in Saturday's second race, had a rough trip. The mare was almost knocked down going to the first turn, moved to contention boldly, was shut off at the far turn and then bled. George Harris has taken over the training of J. J. Martin's Flying Wise. Stall applications for Hagerstown and Cumberland are being distributed by Greg Johnson, assistant racing secretary here. Jockey Willie Nertney probably will shift to the major tracks after the meeting here. His comeback seems to be a good one and there's no reason he can't resume riding with the best of them. Jockey J. Carroll has been reinstated. See you on the rail.—BILL.

Sandlot Baseball

Walter Cobak hurled a no-hit, no-run game as his Silver Spring Elk baseball team swamped Our Lady of Lourdes, 13-0, yesterday in a Montgomery County Junior League game at Bethesda. Cobak struck out 17 men.

Another no-hitter was registered by Peter Statis as his Washington Trainmen edged the Long Island Trainmen, 3-0, in the first game of a double-header in New York. Statis pitched a perfect game; not one man reached first. He struck out seven. In the second game, Washington won, 2-1.

whenever time counts . . . . . You can always count on Schwartz

a great name in jewelry in the nation's capital

- Said the Fly-Boy to the Engineer: "You mean all you need to push that steam-buggie out of here on time is a simple little piece of clock-work from Schwartz?"

- Said the Engineer to the Fly-Boy: "And what else? Schwartz knows that doo-daddle on your wrist is for three-dimensional guys who have to worry about international date lines, split-second timing, and your time over the next range station."

- The Fly-Boy to the Engineer: "Chronograph . . . to you. Life gets complicated in the Upper Strata and Time becomes involved. But Schwartz solves the problem for me with a Timepiece that knows all the answers. Rather go without my co-pilot than go without this."

- The Engineer: "Schwartz makes my Timepiece simple . . . but accurate. Schwartz says that Time's the thing in my business . . . and yours . . . and there's no compromising with a minute that's lost or a balance wheel with an off-key tick. We can certainly shake on that."

- "Clock-wise" is the word for these boys. They know that when Time counts, you can always count on Schwartz . . . whether you're an aviator or engineer living by the time-table, or just an Ordinary Citizen glued to the 9-to-5 routine. Schwartz Timepieces are made for every need, and for every purse. If you want something strictly functional . . . Schwartz will have it. If you're a luxury seeker, intent on a very special gift for graduation . . . or a birthday . . . or an anniversary . . . Schwartz will have that, too. There's no Time like the present to put yourself right up to the minute with a Watch of precision and beauty from Schwartz . . . a Great Name in Jewelry in the Nation's Capital.

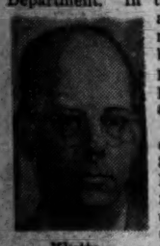
WASHINGTON: MONDAY, JUNE 16, 1947

The Federal Diary

—By Jerry Kluttz—



Kluttz

Thousands of new 30-day provisional layoff notices will go out this week to employes in the War Department. In this city, these are among the notices that will be given to employes in the departmental staff at headquarters: Adjutant General's Office, 843; Army Air Forces; 412; Office of the Chief of Staff, 423; Office of the Secretary of War, 259; Quartermaster General, 325; Finance, 129; Transportation, 175; Inspector General, 12; Engineers, 262; Ordnance, 244; National Guard, 91; Chemical Warfare, 30, and Provost Marshal, 8.

Some May Be Saved

It is planned to get out most of these notices today. Most of the employes will be kept on the job until July 1, when they will be placed on annual leave or leave without pay until July 16 unless the Senate gives the department additional funds. If that happens, many of the notices will be withdrawn. The cut made by the House would require the department to get down to 13,250 employes here.

However, the job of some people here may be saved if Finance, Chemical Warfare, and the War College go through with plans to transfer some of their people to "field" jobs here.

Over the entire country, these are among the provisional notices the department plans to get out this week:

Air Forces, 11,410; Transportation, 4564; Signal Corps, 886; Quartermaster Corps, 3400; Engineers, 957; Finance, 1248, and Chemical Warfare, 451. On the other hand, Ordnance has been given an increase of 738 in its field staff.

165,000 Jobs Involved

Unless the department is given additional funds by the Senate, the department will have wiped out 105,000 fulltime civilian jobs in this country in the four-month period between April 1 and August 1. On April 1, it had 400,000 employes in this country. Layoffs dictated by the personnel ceiling law, Undersecretary Kenneth C. Royall, and by the House in reducing funds will bring the department down to 235,000 workers on August 1.

Incidentally, the department has made a strong appeal to the Senate to restore funds for civilian employes. Its officials believe that 16,000—and not 13,000—is the minimum needed at headquarters here.

Navy also has made a similar appeal to the Senate for additional funds for its civilians. The jobs of more than 2000 people at headquarters are at stake. Despite contrary reports, the department appears to have an excellent chance to get some of the House cut restored.

UPWA is Target

The department encampment of the Veterans of Foreign Wars may come out swinging at the United Public Workers (CIO) union. At its meeting tonight in The Mayflower, a resolution will be presented which would be aimed at the firing of Government employes who are members of the United Public Workers unless, the resolution says, "the union rescind its policy of adherence to the Communist Party line and objectionable platform adopted in 1946."

Eugene Grady, chairman of the local VFW Americanism committee, and Robert H. Johansen of the Pentagon Post, will urge in the resolution that the Attorney General include the union on a proposed list of "subversive" organizations as provided for in the President's loyalty program. However, firings would not be mandatory under the President's proposal.

J. Harold Stehman has been elected the employe member of the board of efficiency ratings in the office of the Secretary of Commerce. Robert Frye, Mitchel J. Bushery, and Curtis Anderson are alternates in that order.

Job Openings

A Civil Service exam will be announced soon for occupational therapists, starting salaries from $2644 to $5905 a year, to fill about 80 jobs in Veterans' Administration. No written test will be given . . . An exam for storekeeper jobs, $1954 to $3021, and property and supply clerks, $2644 to $3021, was announced today by the Civil Service Board of Examiners at Fort Belvoir, Va. Applications must be made before June 30 to the board at Box 127, Fort Belvoir.

The Civil Service Board of the Military District of Washington also has announced an exam for various types of automotive jobs including mechanic, painter, foreman and helper. Salaries range from $6.96 to $13.76 a day. Additional information may be had in Room 2E-1030 of the Pentagon. Also, a test for laundry jobs at Fort Myer, Fort Belvoir and the Army Medical Center here is now open. Salaries range from 76 cents to $1.54 an hour. Civil Service has full information on these openings.

Robert Hanson of Agriculture's dairy branch, will resign to join the American Farm Bureau . . . Maj. Gen. Philip Fleming will retire July 1 from the Army. However he'll continue as the Federal Works Administrator . . . The Society for the Advancement of Management will stage a crab feast and gridiron dinner Thursday at the Mayflower.

Washingtonians Mix Sunshine, Imagination And Come Up With Private Beach in Mid-City

JUST A CONVENIENCE—Sun bathers at "Wesley Beach" near P and 21st sts. yesterday thought their tryst with Old Sol was over when they observed signs at their favorite spot. Gloom, however, turned into joy when they found the signs were aimed only at ball players. The play spot gained its name because it is frequented by many residents of Wesley Hall

So maybe it isn't Old Orchard. Or Rehobeth even.

And could be the water isn't always—except when it rains. And sand—you think that's so important?

To 300 or more office-weary, boardinghouse-dreary Government workers—ingenious, too — these things don't matter a thimblefull.

Yesterday, as proof, they took a strip of grassy land, mixed it with some sunshine and a heavy smattering of imagination. And what do you think came out?

A private beach in the heart of Washington. Located, sh— . . . in Rock Creek Park at 23d and P sts. nw.

The landlocked, would-be beachcombers, boarders at the Wesley Hall establishments in the 1400 block P st. nw., flock to their "Wesley Beach" by the dozens—in as sharp a turnout of bathing finery as any exclusive resort could muster.

Most any summer day there, you can find pretty girls sunning in brief bathing suits, men in shorts playing "catch" or cards and mixed groups just chatting or listening to radios.

P. D. Hunt, 22-year-old freshman at Ben Franklin University, thinks it's a "swell place for people to go." Especially, he adds, "for pretty girls who want to show off their figures—and there are plenty of cute ones around."

Some people say that's why the "cars go slow" along Rock Creek Drive.

Jean Hayes, 20, of 1404 21st st. nw., a Navy Department typist, is keen on the "beach," too, and goes there often.

Mary Pugh of 1408 21st st. nw., another Navy employe, has been visiting the place practically every weekend for three years.

Mudslinging Leads to War, Pastor Says

Real Understanding Of War-torn Europe Situation Held Essential to Peace

By Robert Tate Allan
Post Reporter

Dr. Orris G. Robinson warned yesterday that a lack of international understanding is "leading to war with Russia."

"Congress should have to live in war-torn Europe to get a real understanding of the people," he stated at Calvary Methodist Church, 1459 Columbia rd. nw. "Billions for war, but not even millions for better understanding."

Dr. Robinson contended that "mud slinging and discrediting of public schools, among other things, are leading the world to more strife," and added:

"All people want freedom. No one wants war, not even the Russians who are anxious to know about the American people. Although we are all alike basically, we are continually at each other's throats, because we do not have the facts!"

Personal Touch Needed

Dr. L. Ralph Tabor said that "the church is doomed" unless it recaptures its zeal for personal evangelism.

"You can teach religion but Christianity must be caught," he asserted at Luther Place Memorial Church, Thomas Circle, and added that "a convincing and contagious personal Christianity" is the only way to spread the Gospel.

Before his sermon, Dr. Tabor installed new officers of the Luther Place Men's Brotherhood. They were Luther Wohlsen, president; John Moist, vice president; Frank Pietela, secretary, and Paul Hermsmeier, treasurer.

'Elders Criticized'

Achievement of peace rests upon the fathers of the world, Dr. Harry W. Burgan declared at Hamline Methodist Church, 16th and Allison sts. nw.

In a Father's Day sermon, Dr. Burgan criticized "elders who make possible the creation of war and then send our sons and daughters to fight the wars."

New Way of Living Forged

"A new charter of human living is being forged in the revolution through which we are now passing," Dr. Paul F. Douglass, president of American University, declared at the morning service at Foundry Methodist Church, 16th and P sts. nw.

Failures Deplored

Failure of many church folks to assume Christian obligations was deplored by Dr. Oscar F. Blackwelder, pastor of Reformation Lutheran Church, 217 East Capitol st.

Speaking on ABC's Nation-wide "Sunday Vespers" from WMAL, Dr. Blackwelder said the measure of a Christian and "true American" is to put into society more than they take out.

James H. Ellerbrook was ordained to the Christian ministry at Ninth Street Christian Church, 9th and D sts ne., his home church. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry K. Ellerbrook, 235 17th st. se. He is a graduate of Eastern High School; Butler University and Butler University School of Religion, Indianapolis, Indiana.

District Elks Hold Flag Day Ceremony at Sylvan Theater

More than 200 persons joined members of Washington Lodge No. 15, B.P.O.E., in its annual observance of Flag Day last night at the Sylvan Theater on the Monument grounds.

Representatives of more than a score of patriotic and veterans' organizations participated in a colorful program at which Representative Bertrand W. Gearhart of the Ninth Congressional District, California, was chief speaker.

"Flag day is important in the thinking of all Americans," Gearhart said, "because it symbolizes everything that we hold near and dear. Though the shooting war is over, the war within our gates goes on," he said, urging Americans everywhere to uphold the flag and the principles for which it stands.

Presentation of Elks' medals of honor to the four armed services by Arthur E. Daley, in behalf of the Washington lodge, highlighted the program. The medals were accepted in behalf of their services by Maj. Gen. Clark L. Ruffner, USA; Rear Admiral T. D. Ruddock, USN, Brig Gen. Fred S. Robillard, USMC, and Rear Admiral Raymond T. McElliott, USCG.

A parade from Constitution ave. and Seventh st. nw., to the grounds preceded the program.

Earlier in the day more than 200 persons joined officials of the Virginia State Elks Association in Flag Day exercises on the steps of the George Washington Masonic National Memorial atop Shooter's Hill in Alexandria.

The ceremonies were also preceded by a parade, climaxing a two-day celebration attended by officials of the association from throughout the State. Alexandria Lodge, No. 758, was the official host for the observance, held in a different Virginia city each year.

The principal speaker was Alexandria's Mayor, William T. Wilkins, who paid tribute to the sacrifices made by Americans in defense of a flag "that is symbolic of the principles of brotherly love, charity and fidelity." These same principles, he declared, are exemplified in the work of the Elks order.

Other participants included John H. Liesfield of Richmond, president of the State association; Kenneth W. Smith, exalted ruler of the AOlexandria lodge; Dr. Robert Barrett of Alexandria, past grand exalted ruler of the National Elks order, and G. Russell Bender, a past exalted ruler of the Pottstown, Pa., lodge.

Music was provided by the Alexandria Citizens Band and the Washington Elks Boys Band.

The two bands, representatives of local patriotic organizations and members of the association participated in the parade, which was featured by a 40-foot American flag carried by members of the Alexandria lodge. The procession marched from the Elks Hall, on the 300 block of Prince st., to the scene of the exercises.

A barbecue in honor of the visiting State officials brought the program to a close last night in the recently dedicated Veterans Memorial Court, adjacent to the Alexandria Elks Building.

Md. Woman Killed as Car Crashes Guard Rail

4 in Car Injured; 8 Others Hurt in Traffic Accidents Throughout Area

One person was killed and four injured on the Washington-Baltimore blvd yesterday, while other District area traffic accidents brought injuries to eight persons.

Killed instantly was Miss Deatrie E. Calvert, 21, Frederick, Md., when a car operated by Homer Mitchell, 20, also of Frederick, struck a guard rail at the south approach to the Little Patuxent River bridge near Savage, Md., early yesterday morning.

According to Maryland State Police the car was traveling at a high rate of speed and the driver lost control as he neared the bridge. Those hurt and the extent of their injuries were:

Mitchell, internal injuries, fractured jaw, head lacerations.

Charles N. Barber, 23, a sailor stationed at Pensacola, Fla., who police said was a hitchhiker, internal injuries, head lacerations.

Miss Ann Kidd, 18, Braddock, Md., shock.

Taken to Baltimore Hospital

All were taken to St. Agnes' Hospital, Baltimore, except Barber, who is in the Marine Hospital there.

In the District at Pennsylvania ave. and 6th st. nw., a 10-year-old boy was seriously injured about 6 p. m. when struck by an automobile being driven by Ira J. Farmer of 803 F st. sw.

The boy, James Brennan, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Brennan, 468 Massachusetts ave. nw., was entered at Casualty Hospital with a lacerated right side and possible internal injuries.

Farmer was charged at First Precinct Station with passing a red traffic light and was held in lieu of $100 collateral. The right headlight of Farmer's car was shattered.

Seven other persons were slightly injured when an auto overturned at 28th st. and Dumbarton ave. nw. after colliding with another yesterday afternoon.

The overturned car, operated by Emmett F. Shindell, 19, Edgemoor, Md., collided with one driven by Miss Jeanne Pons, 20, 4715 47th st. nw.

Shindell's car rolled over on its top near the corner curb and Miss Pons' was turned around by the impact and knocked against a parked car owned by Jose B. Castillon, 607 4th st. nw., looking both rear bumpers.

The injured were Shindell, abrasions to the right leg; his wife, Mrs. Lillian Shindell, 16, abrasions to the right leg; Lawrence Briggs, 23, Baltimore, abrasions to right forehead; Mrs. Margaret Briggs, 19, contusions to both shoulders; Miss Patricia Pons, 18, contusions to the left hip; Miss Jane Smith, 17, 3863 Rodman st. nw., bruises, and Miss Pat Pyatt, 18, the Davenport Apartments, contusions to the right side. Mr. and Mrs. Briggs were passengers in Shindell's car and the others were riding with Miss Pons. All were treated at Emergency Hospital and released.

Infants Unhurt

Two infants of the Shindell and Briggs families were uninjured.

Three-year-old Barbara Higdon, 1412 Trinidad ave. ne., suffered scalp contusions and possible internal injuries when she fell from the rear door of an auto operated by Thomas J. Farley, 47, of the same address, at 15th and Tennessee ave. ne., yesterday afternoon. She was treated at Casualty Hospital and released.

A taxicab passenger was slightly injured yesterday afternoon when the cab collided with a streetcar in the 300 block of East Capitol st. The passenger, Robert J. Money, 29, 1423 South Carolina ave. se., was treated for shoulder injuries by a private physician who advised X-ray examinations. The cab was driven by Clarence D. Penn, 33, Capitol Heights, Md., and the streetcar motorman was Myles D. Thurston, 22, 117 Tennessee ave. ne.

Bed Fire Burns Sleeper

Howard Reed, 41, of 526 11th st. se. received second-degree burns of his right hand and foot early yesterday when the mattress of his bed caught fire while he slept.

Awakened by the smoke, he called his brother, Walter Reed, and both men beat out the flames. Howard Reed was treated at Providence Hospital. His brother said the fire apparently was started by a cigarette or hot ash.

800 Enrolled In Maryland U. Home Course

One-Week Classes For Rural Women Will Open Today

More than 800 Maryland women have registered for the twenty-first annual rural women's short course opening at the University of Maryland today.

The course, to be held all week, is directed by Miss Venia M. Kellar, assistant director of extension services. This year's theme is "Today's Home Builds Tomorrow's World."

Subjects offered range from nutrition and home furnishings to landscape gardening and home management. Guest speakers will include Lady Worsley-Taylor, president of Woman's Institutes for England and Wales; Representative Walter H. Judd (R., Minn.), Hugh H. Clegg, assistant director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation; Capt. Rhoda Milliken, director of the women's bureau, Metropolitan Police Department, and the Rev. Peter Marshall, New York Avenue Presbyterian Church.

The short courses, inaugurated in 1923, have been attended by more than 12,000 women. Regular classes are held mornings, with lectures, forums and other events in the afternoons and evenings.

Tomorrow afternoon's program will be conducted by the Maryland State Council of Homemakers' Clubs, with a reception by Dr. H. C. Byrd, university president, in the evening.

The Arlington Civic Symphony will present a concert Wednesday night with a Stephen Foster pageant the following night. Certificates will be presented Friday to women who have attended the courses over a four-year period.

Addressing WCTU

Hobbs Wants Liquor Tax For Clinics

An additional tax on liquor to support alcoholic clinics was urged last night by Representative Sam Hobbs (D., Ala.).

Speaking before the opening session of the seventy-third convention of the District Women's Christian Temperance Union at the Francis Asbury Methodist Church, 16th and Lamont sts. nw., Representative Hobbs declared:

"Those who require such clinics should be made to pay for them."

Citing "growing evils of the ever-present cocktail party," the speaker quoted from a sermon he heard recently that "there are three great parties which mold the actions of the United States—the Republican, Democratic and cocktail parties," adding, "I am ashamed to admit that the greatest of these is the cocktail party."

Hobbs said most people do not possible, "but there are some which I cannot get out of attending, particularly if they are given by constituents."

Hobbs said most people do not enjoy the taste of liquor, but indulge to "blow up their own ego," enjoy a false feeling that they are "big shots."

Defining alcoholism as an inward pressure to drink which the individual cannot resist, he said there are 5000 chronic alcoholics in Washington and an additional 15,000 chronic problem drinkers or "weekend drinkers."

The session was opened with the traditional prayer mosaic of the WCTU led by Mrs. H. A. Rockwell. Musical numbers were offered by the White Ribbon Singers of the Capital Memorial Second Baptist Church. The convention will continue in the Francis Asbury Church today and tomorrow.

Baccalaureate Services Held At Cathedral

Woodrow Wilson High And Teachers' College Graduates Attend

Baccalaureate exercises for two Washington institutions yesterday drew crowds to the Washington Cathedral.

Woodrow Wilson High School seniors, relatives and friends attended baccalaureate rites in the main sanctuary during the evensong services, and heard a sermon by Dr. John Wallace Suter, dean of the Washington Cathedral.

Later in the afternoon, the Rev. W. Curtis Draper, retiring canon precentor of the Cathedral, addressed the graduating class of Wilson Teachers' College, in Bethlehem Chapel.

Canon Draper advised the prospective teachers that they can best develop Christian character in their students by setting a good example themselves. Children best understand religion, he said, through personal example of their elders.

The Divine Science College held its baccalaureate services at the American Legion Club, 2437 15th st. nw.

Teen Agers Used Vacant Apartment

A teen-age boy and girl were turned over to juvenile authorities yesterday, following their arrest on housebreaking charges Saturday after police learned they had been holding drinking parties in an apartment whose tenants were in Florida.

According to police, the girl, aged 15, obtained a key a week ago to a Brentwood Village apartment from a neighbor on the pretext that the tenants were her uncle and aunt.

With the boy, aged 17, she held parties in the apartment for several other juveniles, including a married couple, police said. A later search of the apartment showed that $200 worth of liquor, an electric fan, $65 in change and several sheets, ladies' shoes and cosmetics had been taken, according to police.

Entry to the apartment was first discovered when the boy answered the door after relatives stopped by to check the apartment, police said. At the time the youth said he had permission to use the apartment, but this was denied later, police said.

The girl told her companion that the apartment belonged to an uncle and aunt who were in Europe for three years, according to police.

Service Nearly Normal

Taxicab service in nearby Virginia, almost paralyzed late Friday by the Virginia Corporation Commission's sudden cancellation of all insurance written by Keystone Mutual, is expected to return to normal by late today.

Arrangements to transfer their insurance to other companies has been made by a majority of the cab companies in the Arlington-Alexandria-Fairfax area.

Cardinal Spellman Asks U. S. to Open Doors to Displaced

Francis Cardinal Spellman called upon the Nation last night to set the example for the United Nations by opening its doors to Europe's displaced persons.

The New York churchman's statement was made public by the Citizens Committee on Displaced persons. It was contained in a letter addressed to Dr. William S. Bernard, committee secretary.

Cardinal Spellman said nearly a million persons of all faiths and origins are still living in exile from their homelands in European camps and barracks.

"I pray in the name of God, whose real name is charity, that we do not permit these misery-ridden peoples to be forced against their will to return to countries where, enslaved, their human rights will be denied them."

Flies to France

Staff Sergt. Chester V. Rose of Alexandria, Va., was among the group of eight Army men flown to Carenten, France, to participate in a program yesterday celebrating the liberation of the town by American troops on July 14, 1944.

B. & O. Brakeman Killed in Fall From Freight Car

Alfred C. Nashwinter, 37, of 1351 E st. se., a brakeman for the B. & O. Railroad, was killed instantly early yesterday when he fell from a freight car in the Eckington freight yards.

Nashwinter was working on a freight car switching as the train approached 5th and V sts. ne. when he fell, striking his head on a coupling. He was pronounced dead at the scene by an Emergency Hospital staff doctor.

Police said he was to have left today with his family for a two-week vacation.

2 Teachers Honored

Two teachers at the Woodridge School with a combined total of 76 years of service have been honored by members of the Langdon-Woodridge Community. They are Miss Evelyn Kemp, who has taught at the school for 39 years, and Miss Lillian Eversfield, a teacher for 37 years, both of whom are retiring at the end of the current school session. They were feted jointly at a farewell party sponsored by the Woodridge Parent-Teachers Association and attended by more than 450 residents of the area.

Two Area Fliers Injured as Small Plane Crashes in Meadow at Michigan Park Hills

FORCED LANDING—Mr. and Mrs. Donald D. Mears, 5801 Chillumgate rd., Hyattsville, view the wreckage of a Stinson plane after a forced landing yesterday near Chillum rd. and 15th ave. Michigan Park Hills, Md. George La Croix, 48, of 2700 Webster st., Mount Rainier, owner and pilot of the plane, and Raymond Richardson, 43, of 316 Quakenbos st. nw., were injured when the plane fell due to inability to develop flying speed

Two Washington area men were injured yesterday in a forced landing of their Stimson 105 plane near Chillum rd. and 15th ave., Michigan Park Hills, Md.

The pilot and owner, George La Croix, 48, of 2700 Webster st., Mount Rainier, Md., suffered a fractured wrist, cuts and bruises.

His passenger, Raymond Richardson, 43, or 316 Quackenbos st. nw., Kiplinger Letter Co., circulation manager, suffered a fractured vertebra, cuts and bruises. Neither was considered in critical condition at Leland Memorial Hospital, Riverdale, Md., where they were taken by Brentwood Rescue Squad.

The plane took off from Queens Chapel Airport shortly after 10 a. m. but La Croix was unable to develop enough flying speed to get more than from 50 to 75 feet off the ground. About a quarter mile away, he tried to land in a meadow along Chillum rd., near 15th ave. A wingtip struck a branch and the ship plunged.

Richardson crawled out of the wreckage and helped LaCroix out. As fire flickered about the engine cowling, Richardson took an extinguisher from next to the seat and put it out.

Bill Henderson, airport manager, had seen the plane in distress, took up another plane and circled until he saw the landing near several large illuminating gas tanks. He then flew back to the airport and called the ambulance.

The plane was badly damaged. LaCroix has been flying 15 years, Richardson 10.

D. C. Youth Gets 2 Chances to Enter Naval Academy

Robert B. Loughead, jr., 18, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert B. Loughead, 2926 Legation st. nw., was one of few youths ever to get two chances in one year at the United States Naval Academy.

Loughead, a graduate of Valley Forge Military Academy at Wayne, Pa., entered the Naval Academy at Annapolis last Wednesday on an honor school appointment. He was an honor graduate of the Valley Forge Academy last August.

He also was an alternate on the District of Columbia appointment list, having rated third on the District competitive examination for the academy.

Silver Spring Squirrel Bites Man, Chases Woman Home

A squirrel with antisocial tendencies is giving tenants of the Piney Branch Apartments in Silver Spring, Md., a pretty bad time these days.

This particular member of a usually timid tribe is easily distinguishable from his fellows by a peculiar tail formation. And he concentrates his viciousness on the home of Mrs. Jane Lockwood, 8506 Manchester rd.

Last week he bit the laundryman. Yesterday, he jumped on the carriage of Mrs. Lockwood's grandson and wouldn't budge. Yells and threats didn't faze him. He even chased Mrs. Barbara Brewer, the child's mother into the house. He finally fled when the police arrived.

Mrs. Lockwood, who now keeps a broom handy, said: "I don't know what's wrong with him. The others are just as nice as they can be. We feed them peanuts, and he comes along, chases them away and eats the nuts himself."

Playgrounds Open

Alexandria will inaugurate its organized summer play program today with the opening of 14 playgrounds for a 10-week session, 5 days a week.

Playgrounds will include Cameron Valley, Chinquapin Village, George Mason, Jefferson, Lee, Lyles-Crouch, Maury, Mount Vernon, Parker-Gray, Parker-Madden, Portner's, Potomac View, Washington School and Westover.

200 Passes Snatched

A middle-aged passenger who boarded his streetcar about 4:30 a. m. yesterday at 44th st. and Deane ave. ne. snatched 200 streetcar passes and fled on foot before he could be stopped, Motorman Thomas Fitzgerald, 18 61st ave., Capitol Heights, Md., reported to police.

Church Burglarized

Thieves entered St. Thomas' Church, 1772 Church st. nw., sometime early yesterday, jimmied the doors to the office and study, and stole $27.70 in cash and 100 3-cent stamps after completely ransacking the place, Dr. Howard S. Wilkinson, rector, reported to police.

D. C.-Chicago Air Mark

An American Airlines flagship set a new unofficial speed record between Chicago and Washington yesterday, covering the distance in 1 hour 42 minutes, at an average speed of 368 miles an hour, officials reported.

The previous record, held by United Airlines, was said to be 1 hour 50 minutes. Capt. Willis H. Proctor, River Forest, Ill., piloted the plane, a DC-6, with a capacity load of 52 passengers. He credited a "very good" tailwind with an assist.

Narcotics Stolen

Ben M. Ginsburg, owner of a drugstore at 6224 3d st. nw., told police more than $150 worth of narcotics, including morphine, codeine and cocaine, and about $60 in cash, were stolen from the store about 3 a. m. yesterday.

Ginsburg said he was sleeping in his apartment behind the store, when he heard a noise, investigated and saw someone disappear through the skylight. The thief left behind a quantity of morphine and tincture of opium, he said.

Boys Leave for Camp

First contingent of boys to attend the new Alexandria Boys Camp at Kilmarnock, Va., will leave at 8 a. m. today for a two-week vacation at the 90-acre resort.

Twenty youths will comprise the group, to be under supervision of five councilors. At the end of their stay, 50 other boys will be entertained and by midsummer police officials expect to have the camp operating at a capacity of 116 boys every two weeks.

Johnson Heads Society

Thieves Raid Game

A $45 poker pot was "confiscated" by three men who masqueraded as policemen and broke in on a three-handed game in Alexandria early yesterday.

According to John C. Rose, 1003 King st., he and two card-playing companions were interrupted at about 2 a. m. by the trio, who entered Rose's apartment and claimed they were policemen. As the card players demanded further identification, one of the men snatched the $45 from a table and all three fled, Rose reported.

Police said last night three suspects have been arrested.

The Family Toasts 'Ideal Father' on His Day

By Elsie Carper
Post Reporter

The life of Riley yesterday consisted of being Greater Washington's Ideal Father.

And it was an ideal day for Police Pvt. John O. Riley, sr., his wife, Annabelle, and their three children.

As guests of The Post, which conducted the contest to name the city's top dad, the Riley family of 4327 Harrison st. nw., dined at the Statler Hotel, broadcast over Station WINX and wound up the day at the Capitol Theater, where Riley was introduced from the stage.

Expresses Feeling

"It's a greater feeling than if I were President of the United States," Riley said during the broadcast when asked how he felt about his title.

His 9-year-old daughter Mary Ann, dressed in a new white organdy dress and a big white hair ribbon and wearing her first corsage, read the letter that won her dad the honor.

But when Announcer Williams asked Mary Ann if her dad was a good dad when she brought home a report card, Mary Ann gave a decided "No."

Riley let his wife and children do most of the talking during the broadcast.

"I'm just a country boy who hasn't much to say," he commented.

When asked about the five commendations he has earned as a member of the police force, Riley said that he had just managed to arrest some car thieves and several men who broke into a store.

Agree Dad Is Tops

The other two participants in the broadcast were John, jr., 7, and James, 4. They wore fresh white suits and had slicked down their blonde cropped hair for the occasion. Flashing grins that were duplicates of their dad's they agreed with their mother and Mary Ann that they couldn't have a better dad.

Not all of the praise for Riley came from his family. Announcer Williams told him that just before the broadcast some folks on Livingston st., which is part of Riley's beat, had called the studio to wish that "big, happy Irishman" good luck and to tell him they thought he was as fine a policeman as he was a father.

There was further tribute at the Capitol Theater. After Riley had acknowledged an introduction from Band Leader Sam Jack Kaufman, the audience sang a song that began:

"Pa should get a great big hand;
Pa deserves a big brass band . . ."

Falls Church Names Dunn As Manager

Roy F. Dunn, 41-year-old engineer and town planning expert, has been appointed the first town manager in the history of Falls Church, it was disclosed yesterday.

Dunn, now town manager at Wytheville, Va., is expected to assume his duties before September 1, filling a position authorized by the Town Council about two months ago after more than a year's study. He was chosen by a committee of council members from a group of 14 applicants.

A graduate of the Virginia Military Institute, he was a four-letter sports star and captained the football and boxing teams. As the best all-round cadet in the corps, he won the institute's "Porter Cup."

From 1932 to 1935, Dunn taught mathematics and coached athletics at Augusta Military Academy, Fort Defiance, Va.

For the next two years, he was assistant football coach at VMI, and from 1937 to 1940, sanitary engineer of the State Health Department in Georgia.

Observe Golden Wedding

CUTTING THE CAKE—Placido Bonanno and his wife, Rosario, yesterday marked their fiftieth wedding anniversary by cutting a large cake. They have been Washington residents for 37 years

MR. AND MRS. F. C. POCH

MR. AND MRS. JOHN HERBERT

Placido Bonanno, 68, and his wife, Resaria, also 68, looked back over 50 years of married life yesterday, wondering why some people find life so unromantic.

It was their golden wedding anniversary. Their 5 children, 16 grandchildren and 3 great-grandchildren were at their home, 216 Upshur st. nw., to help them celebrate.

Bonanno brough out his guitar. Italian love songs—"O Sole Mio," "Come Back to Sorrento," "O Mari," "Tamo"—lent atmosphere to the occasion and brought back memories of courtship days in the quaint little Bianca Villa, Sicily.

Still Plays Serenades

Bonanno, a barber, was a serenading guitarist in an orange festival at Bianca Villa in May, 1897. He spotted Rosaria with her parents on a balcony overlooking the town plaza, and like a story-book character, he serenaded her for an hour with Sicilian love songs. A month later, they were married.

"Our married life has been one long romance ever since," he says.

The Bonannos came to the United States in 1906 and moved to Washington after a couple of years in New York. A son, Charles Bonanno, says the father still gets out his guitar now and then to serenade his wife, which keeps romance alive even after 50 years.

Best Man Is Present

Nearly 100 friends and relatives gathered during the afternoon at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John H. Herbert, 522 Varnum st. nw., to extend congratulations to the Herberts. They were married 50 years ago today.

Present was Dr. Thomas L. Higdon of Wayside, Md., who was best man at their wedding.

A mass was celebrated for them at 10 a. m. yesterday at St. Gabriel's Catholic Church, Grant Circle, and among the congratulatory messages was a letter from the Right Rev. J. M. McNamara, bishop, now administrative official of the Washington-Baltimore Archdiocese.

The afternoon "surprise party" was arranged by their two daughters, Mrs. Kathleen Maier, 3654 New Hampshire ave. nw., and Mrs. Samuel N. Smart of Wheaton, Md.

Herbert is 76 and Mrs. Herbert 75. They were married in St. Mary's Catholic Church in Newport, Md. He was in the construction business 42 years before retiring.

50 Pay Respects

The other golden wedding celebrators were Mr. and Mrs. Frank C. Poch, 3211 Morrison st. nw. Nearly 50 relatives and friends visited them during the day.

Poch, 75, was born in Hessen, Germany, and came to the United States in 1892. Mrs. Poch, a native of Baden, Germany, came the following year. Shortly after their marriage, May 15, 1897, in Cleveland, Ohio, they came to Washington, where they had both previously lived.

Mr. and Mrs. Poch have five children, Mrs. Josephine Clements, Fort Lauderdale, Fla.; Mrs. Catherine Burns, Miss Elizabeth Poch, Frank F. and Henry Poch, all of Washington, and eight grandchildren. Observance of the anniversary was delayed until Mrs. Clements could be present.

B. E. Palmer Succumbs to Heart Attack

Burton E. Palmer, 44, 6910 Wilson la., Bethesda, former assistant director of UNRRA in charge of finance and administrative services, died unexpectedly yesterday afternoon while playing tennis with his wife at the Kenwood Country Club, Bethesda, Md.

A certificate of death from natural causes due to a heart attack was issued by the Montgomery County medical examiner, Dr. F. J. Broschart.

Mr. Palmer was born in Portland, Oreg., and was a graduate of the University of Washington where he received degrees in engineering and accounting.

He entered governmental service in 1934 as a field engineer for the Works Progress Administration and came to Washington in 1938 to accept an administrative post with the same bureau. He was later an administrative assistant in the Office of Civilian Defense until he received a commission in the finance branch of the Army in the early days of the war.

As a lieutenant colonel, he was assistant to the chief finance officer. While in this post he developed a simplified payroll system which was placed into effect for the Army and the principles of which have since been adopted in other Government branches.

Upon his discharge, he was appointed to the post with UNRRA which he occupied until a few months ago when he became a consultant to the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. Palmer is survived by his wife, Mrs. Helen Rook Palmer; his mother and two children, Donald and Joan.

Interment will be in Arlington National Cemetery with funeral arrangements to be announced later.

Mrs. Frances M. Rockey

Mrs. Frances Masury Rockey, 53, wife of Lieut. Gen. Keller E. Rockey, USMC, commanding general of the Fleet Marine Force of the Atlantic, died Saturday after a brief illness at the home of her sister, Mrs. Frank D. Weir of Laguna Beach, Calif.

General Rockey and his wife lived in Washington for many years while he had tours of duty here. They last lived here before World War II when General Rockey was assistant commandant of the Marine Corps. General Rockey, who was commanding general of the Fifth Marine Division at Iwo Jima, is now stationed at Norfolk.

Born in Salem, Mass., Mrs. Rockey was the daughter of the late Dr. and Mrs. John Masury of Virginia Beach, Va. She attended Notre Dame Convent in Baltimore. Her childhood was spent at Virginia Beach, where she also made her debut and was married.

In addition to her husband and sister, she is survived by a daughter, Miss Martha Rockey of Santa Barbara, Calif; a son, William K. Rockey, who has completed his first year at the Naval Academy at Annapolis, and a brother, Arthur Masury of Virginia Beach.

Funeral services will be held today at the home of her sister.

Miss Louisa C. Lippitt

Miss Louisa C. Lippitt, a pioneer physiotherapist and retired member of the Children's Hospital staff, died Saturday at a Winchester, Va., hospital following an illness of several months.

Miss Lippitt, 77, was a native of Charles Town, W. Va. She studied at Columbia University and received her nurse's training at Epicopal Hospital, Philadelphia. Subsequently she served as a hospital official in Puerto Rico.

During World War I she served in France as a reconstruction aide with the Army Medical Corps, after which she was assistant professor of physical education at the University of Wisconsin.

Miss Lippitt came to Children's Hospital here in 1924, acting as an instructor in the Nurses' Training School, doing clinical work and lecturing on nursing and hygiene, until ill health caused her retirement about eight years ago. She was the author of two books, "Corrective Exercises" and "Personal Hygiene and Home Nursing."

Surving is a brother, Dr. William Fontaine Lippitt of San Juan, Puerto Rico, and five sisters, Miss Mary Frances Lippitt, Mrs. Laura L. Heriot, Mrs. Ida P. Yates, Mrs. Julia A. Craighill and Miss Minnie H. Lippitt, all of Washington.

Funeral services will be held at Zion Episcopal Church, Charles Town, at 11 a. m. today (EST), with burial in the church cemetery.

Albert Marquet

Paris, June 15 (AP).—Albert Marquet, 72, one of France's most famous modern painters, died yesterday at his home in the Rue Dauphine on the Seine left bank. A specialist in color, Marquet had been pupil of Gustave Moreau and a close friend of Matisse.

Examination Announced

Civil service examination for substitute clerk-carriers at the Riverdale, Md., postoffice has been announced. Applications must be filed not later than July 2. Information may be obtained at the postoffice, 6211 Baltimore, blvd.

Lewis F. Strieter Funeral Will Be Held Here Today

Funeral services for Lewis F. Strieter, 57, president of the Southern Asbestos Co., who died Friday at Doctors Hospital, will be held at 1 p. m. today at Hines funeral home, 2901 14th st. nw. Burial will be in Arlington Cemetery.

Mr. Strieter had been in ill health for about a year and had spent the last three months in Doctors Hospital.

Born in Baltimore, he attended schools there. He came to Washington in 1909 and was employed by the Asbestos Covering Co. In 1921 he and his wife, Ann L. Strieter, whom he married in 1912, organized the Southern Asbestos Co. He became president of the company in 1943.

He was a veteran of World War I, having served as a sergeant in the Quartermaster Corps.

He belonged to the Cosmopolitan Club, University Club, Elks, Washington Board of Trade and the Washington Building Trade Council. His home was at 207 Rock Creek Church rd.

In addition to his wife, he is survived by four sons, Louis S., William L., J. David and James D. Strieter, all of Washington.

In Memoriam

CARMICHAEL, LLOYD EMERSON. In loving memory of our dear son, LLOYD EMERSON CARMICHAEL, who departed this life six years ago today, June 16, 1941.
Six years ago you left us for a better place to rest,
But you are not forgotten by the ones who loved you best.
Your face is ever before us, your voice we will never forget,
Your smiles will linger forever in our hearts.
We love you as long as life and memory lasts.
FATHER, MOTHER AND BROTHERS,

Town Talk—

Height of Capital Social Season Finds Ambassador's Son Doing the Honors

By Eva Hinton

THIS is the season when pretty deputantes stand in line, receiving guests, as Washington's early summer "coming out" parties vie with the winter crop!

But the other late afternoon it was one of the younger men-about-town who was receiving, as Jimmie Tuck made his debut as a host at a cocktail party which he gave at the home of his grandmother, Mrs. James M. Beck.

Having made his own guest list and done all the inviting single-handed, the gathering proved that Jimmie has friends of all ages. Nor was it one of those parties where the host prefers to be untrammelled by the presence of members of the family. His family was there in force, but strictly as guests.

Jimmie's father, S. Pinckney Tuck, is in Washington on leave from his post as United States Ambassador to Egypt and he was meeting his son's frineds and catching up on all the news. (The best news is that former Marine Jimmie has been admitted to Princeton for next fall.)

The host's mother, Mrs. Snowden Fahnestock with Col. Fahnestock, was enjoying Frankie Tam's guitar music as much as were his pretty step-sisters, Clare and Mary Lee Fahenstock.

THE Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and Mrs. Edward Foley, jr., came with her daughter, Helen Bowdoin, and Helen's house guest, good-looking Cornelia Davis, daughter of Henry Gassaway Davis of New York, plus two New York swains who are visiting the Foleys.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Krock and her son, Billy Blair, a former Marine like the host, skipped a weekend afternoon on their farm to come to the party. A lovely mother and daughter were Mrs. Kent Legare and blonde Alberta who will make her debut this week. And a father and son combination was red-headed Blair Childs and Blair, jr.

Mrs. James M. Barnes in a navy silk tailleur and a perky yellow hat, was being solicitiously cross-examined by her son, Grove Smith, as to how she got to the party after lending him her car. And Mrs. Barnes, just as solicitious of him, was not admitting that she came via the Capital Transit.

Lovely, brunette Nora Martins was the center of an animated group. And one of the favorite subjects of chatter was the very well planned midnight swimming party given at Merrywood by Hugh D. Auchincloss, jr., after a recent dance. So well was the party arranged (even up to and including chaperones) that it drew nods of approval from even the strictest parents.

ALSO a subject for delighted discussion was the dance given by Mr. and Mrs. Julius Wadsworth the other evening for Mr. Wadsworth's niece, attractive Katherine Wadsworth.

Mrs. Wadsworth has an art all her own in everything she does, and that hot evening the buffet was planned to refresh and intrigue heat-jaded appetites. The table decorations had a cool, under-sea motif and the food was of a kind and amount that appeals.

Mrs. Wadsworth is too artistic and sensible to present one of those "groaning boards" that make the guests moan that they "wish some of that could be sent to the hungry overseas." The main dishes were cold pheasant, turkey, and ham flanked by platesful of paper-thin, buttered bread and a huge icy watermelon hollowed and filled with delicious diced fruit in liquer.

Harris & Ewing

Miss Carolyn Bradley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick M. Bradley, who will make her debut this evening at a dance to be given by her parents at the Chevy Chase Club. Miss Bradley was graduated from the Madeira School this month

Emily Tuck Engaged to Mr. Greenough

Mr. and Mrs. William Hallam Tuck of Perrywood, Upper Marlborough, Prince Georges County, Md., announce the engagement of their daughter, Emily Snowden Hallam, to William Greenough 2d of Washington.

Miss Tuck went to school in Brussels, Belgium, was graduated from St. Timothy's School, Catonsville, Md., and from Bryn Mawr College. She made her debut at the Bachelors Cotillion in Baltimore, at the Junior Assemblies in New York and Tuxedo Autumn Ball. During the war Miss Tuck was in the Office of Strategic Services and later served with the Foreign Economic Administration in Germany.

Mr. Greenough attended the Ecole Alsacienne in Paris, Le Rosey in Switzerland, Milton Academy and Harvard.

The bride-elect is the great granddaughter of Col. Charles Marshall of Baltimore and the granddaughter of the late Judge Somerville Pinkney Tuck of the Court of Appeals, Egypt.

Mr. Greenough is the son of Mrs. Carroll Greenough and the late Mr. Greenough, architect of the American Church in Paris and assistant architect to Whitney Warren in the construction of the Louvain Library in Belgium. He is the grandson of William Greenough of Boston.

In May 1941 Mr. Greenough went into the Army and was commissioned in the Armored Force. He transferred to the Air Corps and was assigned to combat duty with the Ninth Air Force. Captain Greenough was three times decorated and was made a prisoner of war in December 1944.

Windsor Takes Home Of Late Al Smith

By Marie McNair

Long Island's swank and swish summer colony is looking to that day in August when the Duke and Duchess of Windsor arrive in their midst.

Now in France the royal pair are expected to take possession of the house they have leased at Hampton Bays on August 3. Built for the late Al Smith, it's the same house that the Duke as Prince of Wales lived in when he visited this country many years ago..

The Happy Warrior and his family lived in it for five seasons. It's said to have a private entrance, complete to canopy, straight to the private dining room of the fabulous Canoe Place Inn, where the Duke and Duchess can entertain without fear of publicity.

There are a couple of disappointed Southamponites now that it's definitely known where the Duke and his American born Duchess plan to live.

The two, so the story goes, bought adjoining estates with the thought that they were the only sites to give the Windsors the space and privacy they desired. Having both places also meant that they would be next door neighbors of the Duke and Duchess. However, the deal was actually put through by two of the Duke's close friends, Southamptonites, too, who wish to preserve their anonymity.

From Shanghai, Gordon and Mary Tweedy are letting their friends know of the arrival of Ann Sellett Tweedy, by way of a bit of rice paper on which is sketched a Chinese infant and duck.

The newest addition to the Tweedy family came into the world under somewhat different circumstances than did the first of the Tweedy' young hopefuls. During the war the Tweedys were passengers in a transport plane flying the "hump" from India to China. They were forced to parachute from the plane, and to wander for some hours in the Tibet snow before being rescued. When the baby was born shortly after, birth announcements showed him landing by parachute!

Gordon Tweedy, for a number of years a successful Washington lawyer, is now with the Chinese National Airways Corp. Mrs. Tweedy will be remembered as the sprightly Mary Johnson, on the Washington staff of Time.

TOWN TOPICS:

Mrs. Dwight F. Davis, whose debut dance for her granddaughter, Sherley Smith, was voted by the debutantes one of the best parties of the season, will leave for Bar Harbor on Friday. She'll return to Valley View Farm, which she leases from Comdr. and Mrs. Parke Brady, now at The Hague, to spend another year. Then she'll move into former Senator David Reed's house on S st., which she recently purchased.

James Pomeroy Hendrick's family, which includes Mrs. Hendrick, daughter Alice and son, Arthur, will be leaving a week from today for Manchester, N. H., for the summer. Also holiday bound will be Mrs. Mitchell Palmer, who will leave next week for Long Island to spend the Fourth of July with Mrs. Francis P. Garvan.

Mme. Bonnet To Give Talk

Women leaders from all countries of the world will gather in Paris September 28 through October 2 to attend an International Assembly for Women's World Fellowship.

The International Assembly is announced as a nonpolitical, nongovernment sponsored meeting where influential women leaders from all countries will be invited to freely discuss existing conditions affecting peace and freedom, including such specific and immediate problems as "Feeding the World's Children."

Cooperation of the wives of high-ranking French Government officials is indicated in the fact that Madame Vincent Auriol, wife of the President of the French Republic is honorary president of the International assembly, and Madame Georges Bidault, wife of the Minister of Foreign Affairs, is president of the Assembly.

Mme. Bonnet, wife of the Ambassador of France, will be the guest of honor and speaker at a meeting to be held Friday at 4 p. m. at the United Nations Club. Outstanding women leaders of national women's organizations in the United States and women distinguished in professional fields related to the International Assembly program will attend this meeting where the International Assembly program and plans will be discussed.

Crane—Mattingly

The engagement of Miss Virginia Crane to Thomas Mattingly, jr., was announced by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Clement D. Crane, Arlington, Va., at an informal birthday party given Saturday night. No date has been set for the wedding.

The bride-elect attended schools in New Brunswick, N. J., and Strayer Business College and is connected with Eastern Airlines here. The prospective bridegroom, son of Dr. and Mrs. Thomas E. Mattingly of Washington, attended George Washington University before serving overseas as an officer in the Army Signal Corps. He will enter George Washington Medical School in the fall.

Mack—Keighley

At a reception given in celebration of the twenty first birthday of their twin daughters, Eugenia and Norrine, Mr. and Mrs. J. LeRoy Mack, this city, announced the engagement of their daughter, Eugenia, to Arthur Keighley, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Keighley of Washington and New York.

Miss Mack is a junior at Wilson Teachers College and a majority member of Job's Daughters. Her fiance served in the Army and is now with the Veterans Administration. No date has been set for the wedding.

Blair—Johnson

Col. and Mrs. Shiras Alexander Blair of Washington and Conistone, Gordonsville, Va., announce the engagement of their daughter, Barbara Shiras, to Thomas Frank Johnson, jr., son of Mrs. Thomas F. Johnson of Lynchburg, Va., and the late Mr. Johnson. The wedding is planned for early autumn.

Miss Blair attended Sarah Dix Hamlin School in San Francisco and the Hewlett School, Long Island, and was graduated from St. Margaret's School in Virginia. During the war she served with the American Red Cross and the Marine Corps Women's Reserve in this country and Hawaii. She is a granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Elwell Wood of Kentucky and Long Island and Mrs. Frank Gamble Blair, Birmingham, Ala., and the late Mr. Blair. Her father is on the War Department General Staff.

Mr. Johnson, who served as a Navy lieutenant in the Pacific, was graduated from the University of Virginia, where he is now studying for his master's degree.

Burnett—Wheeler

Mr. and Mrs. Donald Mott Burnett of Arlington, Va., announce the forthcoming marriage of Mr. Burnett's sister, Miss Mary Margaret Burnett, of Hartford, Conn., formerly of Washington, to Leon A. Wheeler, also of Hartford. The wedding will take place Friday, June 27, at 5 p. m., in Arlington.

Miss Burnett was formerly director of education and music director at the Washington YWCA. She was for several years a member of the choir at St. John's Church, Lafayette Square. For the last two years she has been a member of the staff of the Hartford YWCA.

Rogers—Jerry

Col. and Mrs. George D. Rogers of Rio de Janeiro, formerly of Washington, have announced the engagement of their daughter, Jocelyn, to Harold Anderson Jerry, jr., son of H. A. Jerry of Plattsburg, N. Y., and the late Mrs. Jerry. The wedding will take place in September.

Miss Rogers is a senior at Wellesley College, where she is a member of Phi Sigma Society. Mr. Perry was graduated from Princeton University in 1941 and was released from the Army as a lieutenant colonel in 1946. He is now attending Harvard Law School.

Weekend at Resort

The Secretary of Agriculture and Mrs. Clinton P. Anderson, their daughter, Miss Nancy Anderson, and son, Shelburne, have returned to Washington after spending the weekend at The Homestead, Hot Springs, Va.

Morris—Scheer

Mr. and Mrs. Robert A. Morris, Chevy Chase, Md., have announced the engagement of their daughter, Phyllis Lorraine, to William Morris Scheer, son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel M. Scheer, this city.

Miss Morris atended the University of California and during the latter part of the war served as a nurse in the Navy. Her fiance, who was in the Coast Guard and the Navy, was discharged recently with the rank of lieutenant, junior grade.

Women's Society In Flag Day Celebration Here

A Flag Day program featured the quarterly meeting of the Washington Council, National Society of Women of America, Inc., held Saturday at the home of the first vice president, Mrs. John Morrison Kerr, 4522 30th st. nw. All the officers of the council were re-elected for another term.

In addition to Mrs. Kerr, they are: Miss Margaret Louise O'Brien, president; Mrs. Charles Dudley, second vice president; Miss Alice H. Drake, chaplain; Miss Imogene Philibert, recording Secretary; Mrs. Benjamin J. Brooks, corresponding secretary; Mrs. William T. Clerk, treasurer; Mrs. Roger Williams, Mrs. Margaret Sebree and Miss Esther Hoffman, directors. During the recent New York Convention of the National Society of Women of America, Miss O'Brien was elected one of the national vice presidents.

Assisting Mrs. Kerr during the tea hour were Mrs. Clerk, Mrs. Brooks, Mrs. John H. Axford, Miss Drake, Miss Helene Philibert and Miss Imogene Philibert.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Man, Two Years a Column Reader, Gives Advice To Lad, 23, Who Is Getting Frantic in Neurotic Mother's Clutches; He Had Similar Experience

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have been a steady reader of your column for about two years and have found it immensely informative and helpful. At times it seems unnecessarily impatient; but there have been only about three times when I disagreed with your line of thought. The column of May 16 was one of them.

This was the case of a young man, 23, who doesn't know how to free himself from his neurotically possessive mother. He is the youngest of four children; the others are married, and his mother clings desperately to him, using a "heart condition" to hold him—in fear lest she die of shock if he leaves.

My mother was much the same type and I, unfortunately, due to my restricted upbringing, had no insight whatever into what was going on. Your correspondent "F. V." is more aware in that respect, though no less stymied.

Luckily Found Helpful Wife

IT WAS not until I was 28 that I wakened to the fact that either I must have freedom or become a slave to mother's whims, unfitted for anything else. At this time I was offered a job in another city,—a chance to become financially independent and prove to myself and friends that I could be a useful citizen on my own.

That was 25 years ago and as I look back now, I still wonder how I made the break. Every conceivable form of pressure—alternate threats and piteous pleading—was brought to bear, to hold me back. I left in a daze, hardly knowing what I was doing, only determined it must be done. I was just barely able to make the grade, but I did.

Two years later, by the greatest good fortune, I was able to marry a girl whose understanding pulled me into some semblance of what I wanted to be, and knew so little how to be. After that, I gained a new kind of love and respect from my mother; completely different and much more satisfying.

Now, about "F. V.": I think he will have considerable difficulty swallowing your advice, to-wit: "Cut loose from your mother . . . and if the shock proves fatal, it won't be your fault." If he has any feeling at all, the young man will hardly risk his mother's life to get away.

Instructs Lad To Talk Turkey

TO BE SURE, their problem may seem like a life-and-death struggle to both. And granted that the son's desperate necessity to break out of such a situation can only be understood by those who have experienced it, still to act as you advise could hardly establish a new beginning that he could look back on with satisfaction. And it must be such a beginning if he is to profit.

In his case, as in mine, there are other children for the mother to fall back on. True, his sisters and brother have tried to chuck the whole burden on him. Mine did not. He should talk turkey to them when he decides to clear out; tell them the problem of the mother is a responsibility to be shared by all, and that they must shoulder their share, beginning now, while he readies himself for a separate independent existence—just as they have already done.

The chances are 10 to one that his mother won't die in the wake of a break. Most mothers of her type have the resources to hang on to life,—in the hope that eventually, some way, they can inveigle the rebel back again. Yet even if she should pass on, he will have done the fair thing by all concerned if he puts his foot down and makes his intentions clear.

H. L.

Wool Gathering Isn't Thinking

DEAR H. L.: Up to a point, your story has value for "F. V.,"—in proving that salvation depends on cutting loose from the vampire mother. But when you start advising, you fizzle out as a would-be-helper.

In trying to think for him, you are daydreaming in terms of your own mellowed memories. Actually his plight is much worse than yours of 25 years ago. The significant difference—and what a difference!—is that your family (the majority) backed your flight to freedom, whereas his sisters and brother "reprimand" him for feeling rebellious.

Indeed, because he was inducted and perforce went to war, they hold him responsible for the mother's self pity, which has been gathering momentum all her lifetime! They are backing the mother's play; and talking turkey to that deaf, dumb and blind defensive-combine of selfishness were a waste of breath.

Granted the solution I posed is drastic, there is no other "out" for him. Either he bolts and integrates his emotions afterwards, or the quicksands close over his head. Fie on your fence-straddling view. This lad needs a kick in the pants toward safety.

Your Questions On Homemaking

Please tell me how I can get iron rust out of a white gabardine dress. I have tried bleach and also lemon with salt.

E. E. P.

Since you have used both bleach and lemon with no success, the stain may be set so nothing will remove it. However, you might try this: Spread the stain over a bowl of hot water and apply a few drops of oxalic acid solution (3 tablespoons of the crystals to a pine of water). Or put the crystals of acid directly on the stain and moisten with hot water. Rinse in hot water and repeat until stain disappears.

What is the proper way to clean red kid shoes? Mine have a number of dark marks on them that don't respond to rubbing with cream shoe polish. Also what is the best way to wash infant's flannelette pajamas so that they will be soft and not stiff?

C. N.

Use an ox blood liquid shoe polish to clean your red kid shoes. This will take off the spots and give a finish that will prevent more spots accumulating on them.

Rinse infants flannelette pajamas several times to be sure that all of the soap is removed. If possible dry them out of doors and if the day is breezy, so much the better. If you must dry them indoors, shake them vigorously before hanging up and again when they are dry.

Will you please tell me what will remove acid stains from a porcelain top stove.

M. P. B.

There is no satisfactory method for removing acid stains from a porcelain top stove. It would be wise to protect it from further blemishes and stains by using a mat especially for this purpose.

Cut Off My Bread and Call Me Shorty

'You Are What You Eat' Adage Is the Long and Short of It

By Ida Jean Kain

GROWING UP can be a serious time, particularly for teen-age boys who fall far short of being as tall as their pals. And in this age of beautiful, tall girls, no girl wants to be a shorty either.

The best growing years are from 14 to 16. If you are a shorty and do not grow 4 to 5 inches during those years, better check your nutrition. That rate is for boys, 3 to 4 inches is the rate for girls.

While 70 per cent of your height is supposed to depend on ancestry, the way some youngsters are outstripping their parents in height would seem to indicate that nutrition may have a greater influence than formerly supposed.

Watch That Epiphysis

There is a heap more growing up material in some foods than others. But before we get into growing menus, I want to answer the questions from the lads around 19 or 20 who are short and ask if by any miracle they can still shoot up. It's not impossible. To make certain, have an X-ray made of a long bone, such as the thigh bone or arm bone. If the epiphysis junction has not turned to bone, you can still grow. How much depends on nutrition and exercise. Growth usually stops around 21 years of age, but sometimes continues until 24 or even 26 years.

The foods which will help you to outgrow your inherited height are naturally the foods which furnish the growth-promoting materials . . . protein, minerals and the vitamins essential to the utilization of the minerals. In terms of food these are: milk, eggs, meat, cheese; potatoes, green and yellow vegetables and fresh fruits; 100 per cent whole grain cereals and bread.

Milk is the best source of the minerals required for growth and 3 to 4 glasses a day furnish the requisite amount. After school, instead of a soft drink, buy a glass of milk. Chances are you're not keen about spinach or greens; but they are high in iron, also vitamins. Enough iron helps you to grow faster. The iron rich foods are liver, molasses, meat, eggs, whole grains and green vegetables.

Right Bread Does It

Don't skip breakfast! Start the day with a "growing up" meal—citrus fruit or juice, a whole grain cereal with milk, toast and a glass of milk. Or sometimes eggs in place of cereal. Or a smaller serving of 100 per cent cereal and one egg, plus juice and milk is a perfect breakfast. Eat all vegetables, take seconds on greens; ask your mother to serve liver twice a week, and 100 per cent whole grain bread. (Won't she be surprised!)

If you haven't many growing years left, time is of the essence. Ask your doctor to prescribe a potent vitamin B concentrate, one that furnishes the whole B complex. This vitamin is so important to growth.

And take some exercise. Muscular exercise stimulates growth. Muscles are attached to a bone at one end, or at both ends. The pulling of the muscle on the bones makes bones grow. Join a gym class, get a lot of good stretching exercises, and swimming. Or work on a farm this summer . . . and grow!

Maj. Thorp, Wac, Is Newly Elected Fraternity Head

Maj. Gretchen M. Thorp, Wac, has been chosen to head the National Capital Alumnae Chapter, of the Theta Sigma Phi honorary fraternity of women journalists, for the coming 1947-48 season.

When the new officers take over their duties, the following committee chairmen will also be active: hospitality, Mrs. Carol B. Best; directory, Miss Rubye Mullins; constitution, Mrs. Frieda W. Everett; employment, Mrs. Claire G. Sifton; honorary and associate members, Miss Nadine Golladay; publicity, Mrs. Virginia Million; representative to alumnae board, Mrs. Faye J. Manley, and Matrix (official national magazine) correspondent, Mrs. Ellen Young.

The National Capital will have four representatives at the fifteenth annual national convention of Theta Sigma Phi to be held at Los Angeles, June 24-27. These will be: Mrs. Marjorie Binford Woods, Miss Janette Harrington, Mrs. Faye Marley and Major Thorp, who is the official delegate.

Mrs. Marley has already left for the West, stopping by Cleveland, Ohio, to cover the American Red Cross convention before reporting to Los Angeles.

Tinsley—Lininger

Miss Virginia Gillham Linniger, daughter of Dr. Gilbert Ivan Linninger of Denver, Colo., was married yesterday in Mount Vernon Methodist Church to Ernest James Tinsley, son of Thomas Brodie Tinsley of Marshall, Va. The Rev. Ariel Warner officiated and a reception followed at Hotel 2400.

The bride wore a gown of white point d'esprit with flounced skirt and fingertip veil attached to Juliet cap and carried white roses and lilies of the valley. Matron of honor was her sister, Mrs. George Elwynn Brenkert, costumed in blue net with Mary Queen of Scots headdress. Other attendants were Miss Audrey Linninger and Miss Suzanne Cowne, wearing peach gowns, and Miss Anne Tinsley, in blue net. All carried cascade bouquets of yellow daisies and blue delphinium. brother's best man and ushers

C. Stewart Tinsley was his brother's best man and ushers were Thomas B. Tinsley, jr., Harry V. Tinsley and Robert D. Templeton.

The couple will reside in Williamsburg, Va. The bride, a member of Kappa Delta, is a graduate of the University of Denver. Mr. Tinsley, formerly a lieutenant in the Army's Chemical Warfare Division, is attending the College of William and Mary.

Gilbertson—McElfresh

White gladioli, greens and burning white tapers formed the setting for the wedding Saturday of Miss Gertrude Elizabeth McElfresh, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Lister McElfresh of Bethesda, Md., and Robert Edgar Gilbertson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry William Gilbertson of Bladensberg, Md.

The ceremony was held at 3 p. m. in the Bethesda Presbyterian Church with the Rev. James S. Albertson, pastor of the church and the Rev. Hobart D. Evans, of the Hyatsville Presbyterian Church officiating. Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a gown of white slipper satin and mousseline de soie, made with full sleeves and a full skirt with a train. A Mary Queen of Scots headdress held the fingertip veil. She carried a bouquet of white roses. Matron of honor was Mrs. Edward Strohmaier, whose gown was of pink marquisette. Miss Marian Ball, bridesmaid, was in blue marquisette and both attendants carried pink roses.

Henry W. Gilbertson, jr., brother of the bridegroom, was best man and ushers were Frederick B. Williams, jr., and Laurence Jarvis, both of Bladensburg.

Following the reception the couple left for a motor trip through the southern States. They will make their home in Annapolis, Md.

Mills—Fletcher

Miss Betty Lee Fletcher, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Courtney Fletcher of Arlington, Va., Saturday became the bride of William Charles Mills, son of Mrs. Thomas C. Mills of Ironwood, Mich., and the late Mr. Mills.

The ceremony took place at 7:30 p. m. in the Falls Church Presbyterian Church, Falls Church, Va., with Dr. Alton B. Altfather officiating.

The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a white satin gown with fitted bodice and long sleeves, a lace bertha edging the net yoke. Her full skirt fell into a long train and her fingertip veil was held by a coronet of orange blossoms. She carried an arm bouquet of white roses centered with an orchid and a shower of stephanotis. Mrs. David Fitzhugh of Roanoke, Va., matron of honor, wore a yellow marquisette gown with matching lace mitts and a coronet of flowers. She carried deep red roses.

The bridesmaids were Miss Barbara Conrad and Miss Mabel Cross, in orchid marquisette gowns; Miss Alice Price and Miss Dorothy Voight, in pale blue and green marquisette. All wore matching lace mitts and flower coronets. Miss Conrad and Miss Cross carried yellow roses and Miss Price and Miss Voight had bouquets of talisman roses.

B. J. Skinnard was best man and the ushers included G. W. Woltz, Robert Shaid, George Griffin and Theron, all of Washington.

A reception at the home of the bride's parents followed the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Mills left later for a wedding trip to the Adirondacks.

The bride atended National Business College in Roanoke, Va. Mr. Mills attended Michigan Institute of Mining and Technology, and was graduated from Virginia Military Institute in the 1947 class.

Russian Use Of U. S. Plates Faces Inquiry

By the United Press

Three Senate committees will hold a joint hearing Wednesday into occupation currency dealings by United States military forces in Germany, which reportedly will cost the United States upward of 400 million dollars, it was revealed yesterday.

Chairman Styles Bridges (R., N. H.) said his Senate Appropriations Committee would meet with the Armed Services and Banking Committee to inquire into reports that the United States has redeemed between 400 and 900 million dollars of Russian-printed occupation money with American dollars.

The committees also want to investigate reports that the Russian-printed money was made from plates produced by United States forces in occupied Germany.

The War Department has denied that American taxpayers will lose any money through the currency dealings.

"High ranking officials of the War, Treasury and Senate Departments have been requested to testify," Bridges said.

He added that the committees are interested particularly in all occupation currency transactions "as determined and administered by the military authorities or other Federal officials" inside Germany.

More particularly, he said, the groups are interested in any "agreements or understandings between the Soviet government and our own Federal Government regulating the issuance, transactions in, and redemption of Allied military currency."

The Appropriations Committee's interest, he said, "arises from the fact that in the financing of military currency, War Department appropriations reportedly have been overdrawn as a result of Army fiscal officers converting into dollars German military marks issued by the Russians and acquired by our troops."

Flood Perils Waterworks, City's Power

Ottumwa, Iowa, June 15 (AP).—Flood workers in their 10-day battle with the debris-filled Des Moines River fought today to save the city waterworks and prevent a power failure as the muddy river receded very slowly after cresting at 6 a. m. (Central Standard Time).

About 10,000 persons were homeless for the second time in a week as the river crested at 20.04 feet, two-tenths of a foot off a week ago Saturday's record high. An estimated 25 per cent of this city was inundated.

No deaths had been reported.

The Iowa River was rising rapidly at Iowa City, the home of the University of Iowa. The crest was expected about noon tomorrow.

Baltimore Post Hits Legion Head On Immigration

Baltimore, June 15 (AP).—An American Legion post today condemned National Legion Commander Paul H. Griffith as "inhuman, selfish and un-American" for his stand on immigration questions.

Saul J. Shalowitz, adjutant of Maccabean Post No. 32, said 1103 members of the post had considered Griffith's opposition to the Stratton bill in Congress as "a detriment to the American Legion."

In a telegram sent yesterday to Griffith at the Legion's Washington Headquarters, Shalowitz said: "Griffith's views were contrary to the preamble of the American Legion's constitution, which he quoted in part as follows: "To make right the master of might . . . to safeguard and transmit to posterity the principles of justice, freedom and democracy."

Shalowitz referred to recent statements of Griffith before the Daughters of the American Revolution and at a Congressional hearing on immigration.

4-H Clubbers Lay Wreath At Arlington

Members of the 4-H Club, attending the seventeenth annual national 4-H encampment at Arlington Farms, paid tribute yesterday to the Unknow Soldier.

Two of the campers, Bernard Larson of Otho, Iowa, and Helen Henricks of Franklin, Ky., escorted by a 60-member honor guard, laid a carnation-studded wreath at the foot of the tomb in Arlington Cemetery at 1:45 p. m.

The 4-H members earlier attended a special religious service at Christ Church in Alexandria and afterward toured Arlington House and the National Gallery of Art.

The encampment, attended by 184 boys and girls from 45 States and Puerto Rico and their State club leaders, will continue through Wednesday.

Painting lesson

The painter came around today . . . To do our house inside . . . And sort of pretty up the place . . . To satisfy our pride . . . He stretched his canvas out and put . . . His buckets on the floor . . . And went to work upon the wall . . . The ceiling and the door . . . And everything went well until . . . We heard a sudden wail . . . And found that our Kristina dear . . . Had fallen in a pail . . . From foot to waist, including clothes . . . she was completely white . . . And with the tears that trickled down . . . She really looked a sight . . . But now there is no further need . . . To exercise restraint . . . Because our little 3-year-old . . . Has had enough of paint.

Mental Clinic Needs Cited

At least 6500 Montgomery County residents are headed for a mental hospital—sooner or later.

And the county must live with another 6500 of its citizenry that needs psychiatric help.

It is also safe to say that 1800 school children in the county could "profitably utilize" services of a mental hygiene clinic.

And, furthermore, of the 600 neglected children or juvenile offenders who navigate through the Juvenile Court each year, at least 585 are potential adult misfits failing to obtain the kind of services that might alter the course of their lives.

These assertions and others, are contained in the annual report just released of the Mental Hygiene Society written by Dr. Mabel Wilkin, director of Montgomery County's mental hygiene clinic in Rockville.

Now in its fourth year, the clinic has had its ups and downs, Dr. Wilkin says. Now, she says, it not only needs more funds but more understanding from the public.

The prominent psychiatrist, whose resignation, effective next October, was recently announced, cites a shoestring budget, small staff and limited facilities.

Hitting at public apathy, she says:

"Here as elsewhere, the majority of the population marches along unaware of and indifferent to the tremendous unfulfilled mental hygiene needs of its citizenry and, preeminently, for the good of the future, of the human, emotional needs of its children."

What has the clinic done?

A 25-year-old wife and mother thought for a year she had rhumatism and was becoming more and more of an invalid—unable to work or to enjoy her home, husband and children.

After several visits to the clinic, she was shown her rheumatic symptoms were imaginary—part of an emotional conflict.

A 25-year-old former Army corporal was discharged from the service with vague gastro intestinal complaints. These symptoms soon disappeared, but were replaced by an intense fear of death from heart trouble (which he did not have). The clinic cured him.

A "bad boy" who lied and stole until he was inevitably brought before the Juvenile Court, was found to be acting up only because he wanted attention.

A 16-year-old girl, highly intelligent, unfriendly, unpopular, lonely was brought to the clinic. After nine months of regular visits she discovered the reasons for her suspicious attitudes toward others.

"I feel as though I were just emerging from a five-year-long nightmare," she said.

And so it goes. This year, Dr. Wilkin says, the clinic is operating on a budget of $13,000 from the Community Chest. Last year 1800 patient visits were recorded and the year before 1500.

"But we still see too many cases where an individual's difficulties have been allowed to continue for years until a point is reached at which some institution or set of institutions is unable any longer to endure his behavior.

Capitol Heights Boy, 14, Drowns In Chesapeake

A 14-year-old Capitol Heights, Md., youth was drowned in Chesapeake Bay at 7 p. m. yesterday as he and an older brother waded about 100 yards off shore at Chesapeake Beach.

The youth was identified by Maryland State police as Walter Schulen, 408 64th ave., Capitol Heights. He, his father, Frank Schulen, and a 27-year-old brother, Frank, jr., were spending Sunday at the beach.

Police said Millard Stevens, captain of a 44-foot sailing yacht, pulled the brother from the water about 35 to 40 feet from the end of a beach jetty. The two, police said, stepped suddenly into water over their heads.

Gordon Sinnett, manager of the Rod and Reel restaurnt on the beach and a member of the North Beach Volunteer Fire Department, and others dragged the bay, using Stinnett's motor launch, in an effort to find the body.

FOR BEST SERVICE PLACE YOUR ADS EARLY

The steadily growing volume of classified ads in The Post, combined with the practice of many advertisers who phone late in the day, is making it difficult to devote the time and assistance to these late callers which is needed to prepare the most effective possible copy.

To assure receiving this help from your ad-taker, please try to call during the morning or early afternoon.

THE DISTRICT LINE by Bill Gold

Pedestrian's Short Cut Averts Road Block

STREET SCENE

A District Liner in good standing swears he actually saw this happen, but I think he's pulling our leg.

He says the lady must have had a pet aversion to motorists who pull up on crosswalks when they stop for traffic lights (instead of stopping short of the crosswalk, as they're supposed to).

When there's an auto on the crosswalk, pedestrians have their choice of walking around the front, or detouring behind the offending vehicle.

But our District Liner says this woman showed her displeasure by entering the back door of the car, walking through and emerging from the other side.

The driver, he says, was too startled to utter a sound.

INFORMATION PLEASE

The wife of a good friend of mine always keeps a supply of soft drinks around the house during the warm months—and thereby hangs a rather alarming tale.

She keeps the soda pop in a kitchen cabinet under her sink. As space permits, bottles are moved from the cabinet to the refrigerator.

Last week she reached into the cabinet for reinforcements and had just put her hand on a bottle when it exploded.

This wasn't a case of the cap merely popping off—the whole bottle burst, and her leg was badly cut by flying glass.

What makes the incident "alarming" is that the doctor who sewed up the leg at the hospital commented:

"You'd be surprised how many accidents of this kind we have."

This is the first time I've ever heard of such an incident—and I wonder if any of you District Liners can tell us what makes the bottles explode, and how we can avert such accidents.

o-o

NO TOKENS?

A postal money order for $7.75, made to the order of Children's Hospital, was enclosed in the following letter:

"My name is Carole Gordon. I am in the fourth grade at the Cuno Rudolph School, and I am nine years old.

"The children here had a circus for the benefit of Children's Hospital and the following took part:

"Bernard Sperling, ringmaster; Judy Glazer, tightrope walker; Allen Meyerhoff, muscle man; Stanley Schafer, policeman; Dale Holtzman, Queen; Bobby Goldberg, cowboy; Larry Sperling, wild man of Borneo; Michael Marantz, cowboy; Janet Cohen, acrobat; Joan Meyerhoff, tap dancer; Mandell Stearman, drummer; Phyllis Bernstien, gypsy; and Carole Gordon, clown and production manager.

"We had an audience of about 75 children and grown-ups and we collected $7.75 which we are enclosing."

Thanks, Carole, and I certainly hope you spelled all those names right—because if you didn't, I'm going to hear from the parents this afternoon.

TWO MORE CONVERTS

Mrs. Edith W. Meyer of 1440 Columbia rd. nw. writes:

"I want to join the Lizzy Stone League for the Abolition of Long Skirts—but let's be sensible. I don't believe in either extreme—revealing knobby knees or sweeping the streets."

E. S. W. of 3714 2d st. se. has been converted to the Lizzy Stone League for a different reason. She writes:

"The whole idea of longer skirts sounds like a plot to squeeze more dough out of us poor wage slaves.

"I bought a new dress last week in one of our 'better' stores. I didn't buy it to be in style, but because I needed a dress. It turned out to be 'the latest style.'

"Today, I looked at the darn thing as it hung, inside-out, in my closet. And whadda ya think I found attached to one of the side seams?

"The Blue Eagle, so help me! An NRA label!"

Grin and Bear It

"I had no ideer the hired hand was on strike—till I saw the sign layin' over there!"

HERE is a pleasant little game that will give you a message every day. It is a numerical puzzle designed to spell out your fortune. Count the letters in your first name. If the number of letters is 6 or more, subtract 4. If the number is less than 6, add 3. The result is your key number. Start at the upper left-hand corner of the rectangle and check every one of your key numbers, left to right. Then read the message the letters under the checked figures give you.

The Bridge Deck

By Florence Osborn

A take-out double by the West player of today's deal brought out a three-diamond response, placing his partner with an important card, the diamond queen. This permitted West to make a brilliant opening lead and defeat South's three-spade contract.

West decided that if he played his diamonds in the normal way, leading the king and following with the ace, declarer would trump and he might never be able to put his partner in for a club lead-through. It was reasonably certain on the bidding that his partner held the diamond queen, so he decided to underlead the ace and king to try to get East in at once for a club return and possibly three club tricks.

East won the diamond nine and shifted to the queen of clubs and South was set one trick, losing a diamond, three clubs and a heart.

With any other opening lead declarer makes nine tricks by an end play. Assuming West opens the diamond king and continues the ace declarer trumps, draws trumps and plays the ace, king, small of hearts, throwing West in with the jack.

West now must lead away from his club ace, giving South the king or return a diamond, which declarer can ruff on the board, discarding a club from the closed hand. Either way, declarer makes his three spade contract, losing only two club tricks in addition to the diamond and heart.

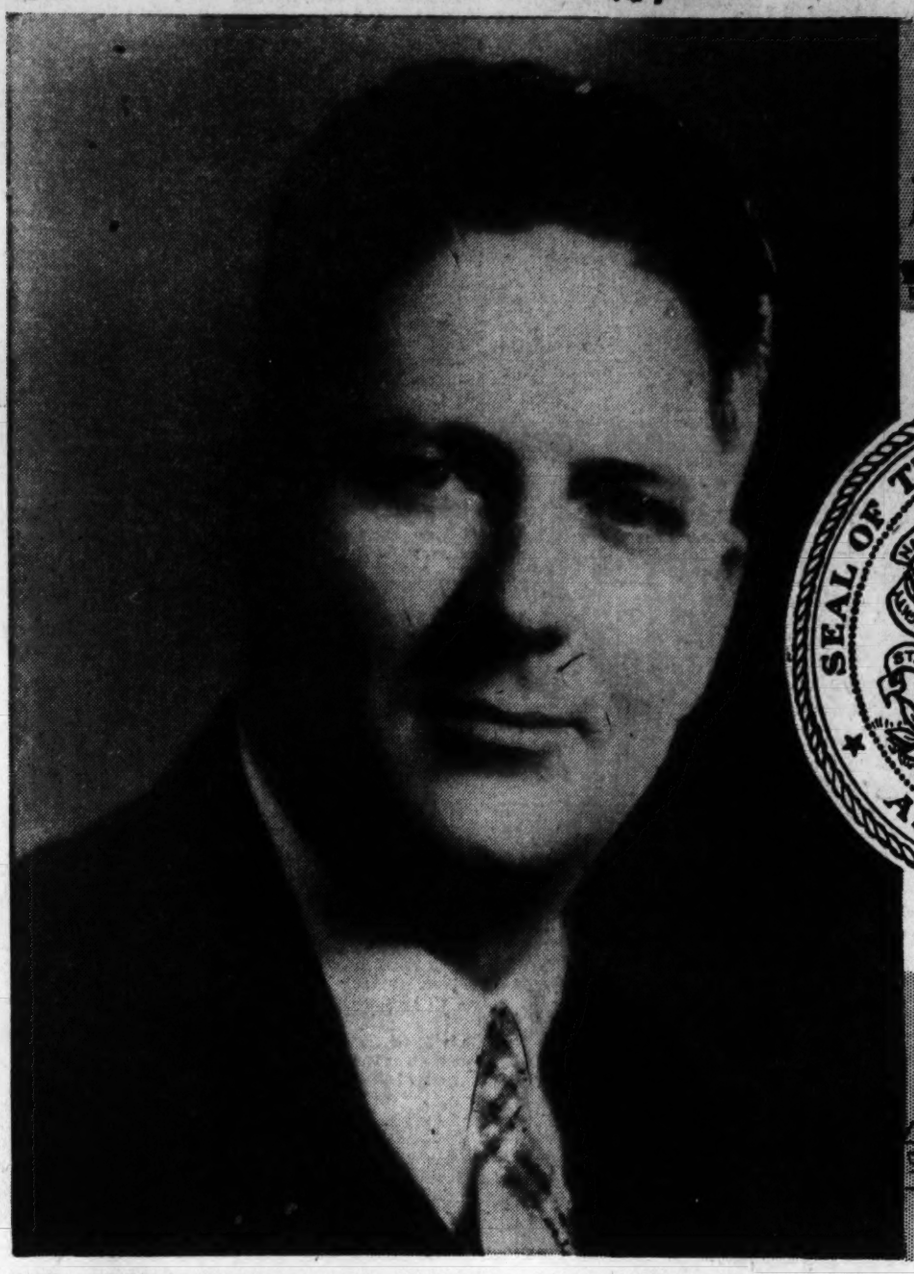
A GREAT STORE IN THE NATION'S CAPITAL



Calvin Johnson, President Illinois State Society

THE HECHT COMPANY SALUTES THE CITIZENS OF WASHINGTON WHOSE HOMES ARE IN

ILLINOIS . . . an "Empire within itself"

● ILLINOIS . . . Broad Prairie State on the banks of the Great Lakes . . . endowed by Nature with fertile plains and great natural resources. The ingenuity and perseverance of her people made her a leader in manufacturing, agriculture and allied industries . . . transportation . . . mining.

● ILLINOIS . . . Where Abraham Lincoln spent his young manhood in the practice of law, in Springfield . . . leaving to assume the leadership of his country in the War between the States . . . returning only to find his final resting place in Oak Ridge Cemetery.

● ILLINOIS . . . In the grain belt that feeds the Nation. Since her early days, high in agricultural output . . . now ranking first in production of soy beans, second in corn, third in oats . . . near the top in hogs and dairy products.

● ILLINOIS . . . An important transportation center for the United States, Chicago is the largest rail center . . . the busiest long-flight airport city . . . and the fourth busiest Great Lakes port. The State, as a whole, is third in railroad track mileage. The Wabash, Ohio and Mississippi Rivers are much-traveled water routes.

● ILLINOIS . . . With a rich yield of minerals from her soil . . . more than half the State is underlaid with bituminous coal. First in production of peat . . . new oil pools are still being discovered and developed . . . and her sand and gravel business is second in the Nation.

● ILLINOIS . . . Proud of Chicago, one of the biggest industrial centers of the world . . . whose business district was almost completely destroyed by the great fire of 1871 . . . reputedly started by Mrs. O'Leary's cow kicking over a lantern. Chicago has rebuilt itself to become the largest city in the interior of the continent . . . second in the country . . . and third in the world.

● ILLINOIS . . . Third in U. S. manufacturing . . . with Chicago first in slaughtering and meat packing . . . and, with its adjoining cities, second in iron and steel production.

● ILLINOIS . . . Where public education was encouraged as early as 1787 . . . now supports a State University, in addition to five teachers colleges and normal schools . . . and the University of Chicago is conducting an experiment in progressive education in higher institutions of learning.

When Illinois was first glimpsed by members of the expedition of Marquette and Joliet, as they made their hazardous way in canoes up the Illinois River, one of the explorers described it by saying, "We have glimpsed nothing like this land we enter for fertility of soil; its prairies and its woods; its cattle, elk, deer, wildcats, swan, ducks, parakeets, and even beaver." The people of Illinois have made full use of all these resources; the rich plains of Illinois (it is the third most level State in the Nation) were early put under the plow, making it the leading agricultural State in the Nation by 1870. Cyrus McCormick, seeing that the best market for his new reaper lay in the agricultural Middle West, located in Chicago . . . a forerunner of the industrialists who were to make Chicago a manufacturing and trading center of the Mississippi Valley and, indeed, of the whole world. Chicago's site on Lake Michigan and proximity to other water routes also contributed heavily to her phenomenal development to a leading World city from her incorporation in 1833 as a village of 150 people. We citizens of Illinois appreciate this opportunity afforded us by The Hecht Company to say that our greatest desire is that the friendly spirit displayed by the people from all the distant sections of our country, and of all races and creeds, working together here in Washington in close cooperation, may be carried to the Halls of the United Nations to help further peace and democracy throughout the World.
